CLASSIFIED WANT ADS get right down to the point at issue. If you want something, say so in a few well-chosen words. Readers like that sort of straight-from-the-shoulder-talk, and that is the reason why condensed ads are so productive of the best kind of results.

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS are always noticed. They are read by wide-awake, intelligent grocers, who are on the look-out for favorable opportunities to fill their requirements.

LARD

The prediction which we made regarding prices for Lard during September has been more than proved correct. The quotations this week are the highest we have ever known. Such, however, is the scarcity of Pure Lard that we should not be surprised to see prices even higher before the end of the month.

We want to remind you we have excellent Lard Compounds and Cooking Oils. These are quoted at very reasonable prices and are being largely sold at the present time.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Hog Scarcity all Over America—High Grain Prices to Blame —Provision and Produce Prices Soar Higher—Waiting to Hear From Danish Commission—Canada Consuming Two-thirds of Her Dairy Products—England Wants Canadian Eggs.

There is nothing in sight that will relieve the pork situation from the present difficulty of procuring the supply to meet the requirements of the packers. The shortage is not confined to Canada alone. In the United States the number of hogs killed since March 1, is 1,305,000 less than last year during the same time. The reason of this must be the fact that all kinds of grain are high, and that the farmers are tempted to sell them rather than feed to hogs.

The packers are anxious to know whether the commission sent by the Government to Denmark to investigate their methods of hog culture, has found anything to help us out of our difficulty. It was early in the spring that they left and since then those who are deeply interested have not heard anything more about them. Perhaps the people who strongly recommended this commission could give the packers the information they desire.

The average price of cheese on the different Canadian cheese boards is 11 5-16c. This is a shade lower than last week, but still not leaving much of a margin for the exporter. It is interesting to know through the report of J. E. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner, that the home market for cheese is rapidly growing, that we are now consuming about two-thirds of all our dairy products, and that there is still an enormous demand for cheese unsatisfied on account of not being put up in the proper way. It would also be interesting to hear from the commissioner, how he would recommend this cheese to be prepared.

There is some indcation that England will this year want some of our eggs. Already it is reported that several large contracts have been entered into. Our egg trade with England has fallen off almost to nothing during the last few years. This is owing to the fact that we had no surplus to spare, which kept our prices beyond their reach.

BUTTER—Market steady, with some western demand. Receipts are light, due in a large measure to cream exportation to the United States. Receipts this week are 10,025 packages, as against 11,163 packages corresponding week last year. For the season they are 303,102 packages, as against 329,855 packages last season. Both quotations show a decrease from last year.

CHEESE—The market is steady at a decline. Very little United States buying, however, would be necessary to advance the price. General confidence prevails in present values. Receipts are declining. This will be still more evident nevt month, as many manufacturers are turning their attention to butter. Receipts this week are 61.773 boxes, as against 58,562 boxes same week last year. For the season they are 1,507,195 boxes, as against 1,461,366 boxes same season last year.

PROVISIONS — Stocks are low, and packers are finding difficulty in filling their orders. Frequently orders are made up by different packers supplying certain lines. Hogs are still scarce, and the producers seem to control the market. While there are no changes reported in the prices of cured meats, the feeling is very strong and some have no difficulty in securing orders at advances in the quoted prices.

CHEESE—The local market for home consumption is fairly active. The price of cured meats is gradually growing away beyond the reach of the ordinary people, who are using more cheese instead. With an effort on the part of the grocers, the consumption of cheese should increase. By comparing cheese with other articles of food, it is much cheaper, and the supply is waiting for an outlet. The quality of cheese now sold to our own people is equal to any that is exported, and this should lead to a larger consumption, especially if the grocers call the attention of their customers to its real food value.

Cheese, new, large	0 12½ 0 12¾

EGGS—The fact that the producers control the markets in almost every line is apparent in the egg trade. Eggs are to-day about 5c a dozen higher than at this time last year, and the receipts are much heavier. Some weeks ago the receipts fell off, and prices in consequence went up. It appears now that the eggs were held back to force up the price. That this was done is proven by the fact that the receipts now much heavier, are not strictly fresh.

Fresh eggs	0 25 0 26

POULTRY—The market is full of poultry and the dealers in the city are equipping themselves with cold storage and other facilities, for taking care of this farm produce. Instead of the farmers killing and dressing their chickens they now send them in alive, and the dealers here dress and handle then in such a way that they can pay for them from 3 to 4 cents a lb. more than they used to.

HONEY—The market is active, and a good deal changes hands. Like preserves, jams, etc., the city trade demands it put up in small packages, and therefore the most of it is sold here in glass, although that is not the most economical way to buy it. Comb honey is high and sales are slow.

ADULTERATING HONEY BY THE BUSY BEES.

is not responsible, for, in the case of necessity, instinct dictates that he gather the honey dew.

Weather conditions affect the quality of honey by raising and lowering its specific gravity. Honey is essentially a saccharine syrup — a form of crystal sugar. During a wet season the nectar becomes diluted by the absorption of moisture, its specific gravity is lowered, the syrup is weaker. During a dry season the converse is true. In collecting this nectar the bee makes either a weak or a strong honey.

The fixing of a standard for honey appeals to one familiar with bee culture and the production of honey as being decidely ridiculous. The term honey is necessarily a general one, and the standard for honey must necessarily permit of considerable latitude. He might as well establish an arbitrary standard for wine and make all wines come under the standard. The different kinds of honey differ as much as the different kinds of wine. There is as much difference between apple-blossom honey and buckwheat honey as there is between sherry and souterne wine. A standard to include all varieties of honey must be liberal.

Not Much Strained Honey.

Dr. Wiley, the pure food man of the United States, refers to "strained" honey. The practice of straining honey is as obsolete as the practice of spinning in our homes. Straining honey is only resorted to when it is hunted in its wild state, when it is taken from stony crevices or chopped out of hollow trees. Little of this kind of honey reaches our markets to-day. The practical beekeeper extracts his honey from combs by centrifugalization, and places the combs thus emptied back into the hives to be refilled. In this wise he saves the time of the bee, which would have to be consumed in making wax for the building of a new comb to replace that which would have been destroyed by the old process of straining (bees can gather fifteen pounds of honey while they produce one of wax), and he also preserves the brood in the comb—the pupa state of the bee—which the straining process, of course, destroys with the comb, and the mashing up of the brood and larvae with the comb and honey, which said process entails, is revolting to those who are precise about what they eat.

Dr. Wiley states that strained (he probably means extracted) honey should be regarded as impure because it loses something. The process of extracting does not cause it to lose anything. If it is not what the bee gathered, it is likely because something has been added to it in the way of an adulterant rather than that it has spontaneously "lost something." He also leaves the inference that honey in the comb is always pure. The comb holds what the bee has placed in it. If the bee has gathered good honey, the honey in the comb ought to be of good quality; but, if the bee has gathered an impure product, how can said comb contain good honey?

Most people think that honey in the comb escapes adulteration. It does; but the adulteration of comb honey is still an easy matter — the adulteration takes place prior to the product's being placed in the comb and sealed by the bee. There is nothing physical which will prevent a beekeeper from feeding his bees with cheap syrup and letting them deposit it in the comb and cap it nicely. To the unsuspecting, such a comb capped by the bee himself, is a guarantee of purity; yet the customer might be buying ingeniously sealed glucose.

DEATH OF W. O. MACPHERSON.

Gravenhurst, Sept. 27.—(Special)—W. O. McPherson, for many years traveler for Geo. E. Bristol & Co., wholesale grocers, Hamilton, died suddenly at the Station Hotel here this morning. Mr. Hutchinson, who had known deceased for the past 20 years, took charge of the body.

The late Mr. McPherson, who resided at 56 Major Street, Toronto, had been a commercial traveler for 30 years, the past 25 of which he had been connected with the Bristol firm, although the name of that concern had been changed several times. He was 55 years old. His route took in the northern part of Ontario, and he was well known in the towns north of Toronto. Deceased was troubled with acute indigestion, and this is believed to be the cause of his death. The funeral took place from his late residence on Wednesday.

Hubert Perron, cheese maker, St. Alban, Que., has assigned.

St. Arnaud & Gougeon, provision dealers at Montreal, have dissolved.

Harris & Drum, wholesale provision merchants at Montreal, have assigned.

Shop Cleanliness Necessary to Sell the Goods

The First Requisite to Become a Good Salesman—Often Young Employes in an Endeavor to Get Rapidly to the Top Spoil Their Chances—Close Acquaintanceship With Goods Is Necessary.

By J. MacFarlane.

On the question of "Salesmanship," the first thing to which I would refer is the general appearance of the store in which the salesman is to do his work. The shop should be tidy and clean, well ordered, everything in its place and a place for everything. It is a most humiliating thing when a customer comes in for an article that there should be a search required to be made. It indicates that, at any rate, the goods are not well kept, or that they have been so long in stock that it were perhaps better for the customer to cancel her order. The counters should be clean, the windows having a tidy, fresh appearance, and the goods, especially in the case of hams, bacon, butter, and cheese, should be carefully handled.

The shopman himself should be carefully groomed; one cannot be always spotlessly clean; in fact, a man having something to do will very soon present the signs of his work on his apron and jacket; but there is a difference between an apron soiled with work and a dirty apron.

When customers begin to appear they should be served with promptness; they should be studied as far as it is possible to do so in the limited time at your disposal; to some extent you can find out the humor of your customers by the manner of their speech.

Knowledge of the Goods.

One of the first requisites in a successful salesman is a knowledge of the goods he is handling. With long service, and an opportunity of comparing similar goods of differing qualities and prices, he will be able to get a knowledge as to the quality and relative value of much that is in an ordinary grocer's shop. But there are articles in regard to which it is well to get something more than a merely superficial knowledge. In the good old days, when a young man was apprenticed to his trade, it was doubtless the master's duty to teach his apprentice his business and in some cases it was done. But in a great many cases there was no more teaching than was absolutely necessary to enable the youth to perform the duties which his master did not wish to perform himself.

Things Turn Out Wrong.

At the present time there is even less technical training. A young fellow rises from his message boy stage to do odd jobs at the counter getting his turn at handing out goods in packets, until he is tempted away to some other shop to assume greater responsibilities than he is fitted for. Then on he goes like a rolling stone, gaining some kind of experience, but no intelligent appreciation of his own trade.

By and by, he starts in business himself, to find, in a more or less short time, that the fortune he set out to make has not come, owing to a variety of causes, such as "depression in trade," "extra keen competition," or a hundred and one reasons, but the real one—an utter want of knowledge of how to conduct a business when he has got it.

There are many shopmen who have little chance of gaining an all-round experience, but a young man who is determined to get on will make an endeavor to get that knowledge. There is nothing too small for him to learn; he never misses an opportunity of knowing something about his goods.

The Effect of Good Window Displays—Sunday Window Suggestions.

From my own personal observation, says a writer, I have noticed that window displays do much good, as they attract the notice of the customers—and non-customers as well — and get the firm's name talked about, which is certainly conducive to increased trade. They are also conducive to a good moral effect, not only upon the assistants but upon the principals as well, encouraging in both habits of neatness as well as the necessity of keeping the stock clean and systematic, in order to correspond with the windows.

As for their effect upon the public it is certain that the majority of purchasers look upon the store having tasty window displays as one in which a complete and well-arranged stock, polite and well-dressed assistants and other attractive features will be found.

It is to be feared, however, that some grocers pay more attention toward making their windows look attractive than to make them draw trade. Of course, every window should be attractive, but the main idea, the Alpha and Omega of window dressing, the be all and end all of the window's existence—should be to "shift" the goods. There are window displays and window displays, but whether they are capable of making sales depends entirely upon the man behind the scenes.

The best Sunday display for a grocery store is doubtless a curtain, says another authority. Fresh fruits and vegetables can not, of course, be shown in the window of a store closed on Sundays — consumers naturally conclude that the place for such goods, over Sunday, is in the ice box. A pleasant impression is given by placing in the window, for Sunday, a few potted plants, when these are available. Potted plants are used for decorative purposes in many of the most attractive grocery stores, and they can be utilized in a variety of ways in any of them. They set off a good clean stock just as flowers ornament the banquet table, and their use in the Sunday window can be made without greatly taxing the energy of the Saturday night staff of assistants.

Christie Fancy Biscuits

EUROPEAN BISCUIT MANUFACTURERS WOULD BE THE FIRST TO ADMIT THAT CHRISTIE FANCY LINES ARE EQUAL IN QUALITY, PURITY AND NUTRIMENT TO THE BEST MANUFACTURED ANYWHERE. Yet we would hesitate to compete with the high standard English manufacturer on his own ground. Because we know that a long sea voyage would not add anything to the flavor of Christie Biscuits.

There's no doubt about the high Quality of the rare European Fancy Biscuits on the other side of the Atlantic. But when they are shipped over here there's a difference. Grocers, mindful of their reputation, would as soon hand out counterfeit change as stale biscuits to their customers. Why take chances? Stock Christie Fancy Biscuits. You can always get them fresh—in small quantities—when you want them. And on this side of the Atlantic, they are incomparable.

N.B.—"Maderia Mixed" and "Cherry Rings"—our newest biscuits—ampy sustain the Christie reputation.

Flour, Cereals and Confectionery Department

Flour Prices Decline in Eastern Canada, With Still Lower Prices Promised Later On—Ontario Markets Fairly Firm—Bran, Too, is Weakening—Farmers Holding Their Wheat.

The wheat and flour market seems to be a "puzzler" to even the oldest and most experienced dealers. Wheat was expected to drop much below the present prices, and calculating from the standpoint of supply and demand there is no reason why it should not be cheaper. From some authority, in whom the farmers have considerable confidence, advice reached their ears that they should not be in a hurry to rush their wheat into the market. This seems to be at the bottom of the whole trouble. Millers cannot get enough wheat to fill their orders without paying more for it than they think it is worth. Buyers of flour are ordering in small quantities to keep their customers supplied, and are looking every day for cheaper flour. Business is done from hand to mouth, each one watching to see what card the other fellow will play. While we are in this position and are holding back, Russia is pouring out its wheat at the rate of five mollion bushels per week. With the Northwest showing from day to day, as threshing is progressing, that the yield is much better than was estimated, it will remain to be seen whether the advice given to the farmers was to their advantage or not.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Flours have dropped 20c per bbl. owing to the situation in the maritime provinces. Ontario millers have been selling at greatly reduced prices in the east, and Quebec millers have had to reduce their figures to hold trade. It has resulted in a general reduction in Ontario and Quebec by local millers as well. Prices are now very close to cost of production, but will probably be even lower in the near future, though not likely for any length of time.

SHOP HINTS.

By Frank Farrington.

Originality is good and it pays, but not everyone can be original. However, if you can't be original you can be careful whom you copy. Don't copy anybody's worthless ideas.

Practically every man you call lucky because he has succeeded in building up a good business, is lucky because he is observant and energetic. You can be observant and energetic. You can cultivate those qualities even if they are not natural.

There are not a few successful merchants who owe their success to their careful and intelligent reading of the trade journals—and to being willing to subscribe for enough of them to cover all their lines.

New family in town? What will be their first impression of your store? Will it bring them in once? Will it bring them in again?

Money saved by hiring cheap help isn't generally well saved. A good clerk makes satisfied customers and a poor clerk sends people away disgusted and disgruntled.

The things that make a man discontented are not what he has, but what he wants.

It always worries an absent-minded man to think he can't remember what it was he was going to worry about.

CANNED GOODS LABELS.

Should Directions for Use be on Them? —Unfair Advertising.

England has many Retail Grocers' Associations which regularly hold meetings and discuss questions of direct import to the grocery trade. That these sessions are beneficial cannot be questioned. They tend to produce a wider knowledge of the trade and often become of direct financial benefit.

At a recent meeting the Southampton Grocers' Association considered a question in relation to the directions on canned food tins. A suggestion was made that endeavors should be used to ensure that every tin of canned food bore a legible direction to the purchaser that the contents should be turned out as soon as the tin was opened. Some tins already bore such a direction, but in such small lettering that it might easily be overlooked. In the discussion which followed, there was a disposition to dwell upon the wider question of the justice of holding a grocer liable for possible ill-effects following upon the consumption of an article which the grocer himself could not know anything about, assuming that the tin was not blown.

At a meeting of the Parliamentary Committee of the Federation of Grocers' Associations correspondence on the subject of the advertising statements of certain firms with a view of pushing their goods, which statements included condemnation of other goods, were considered. The committee felt that this form of advertising was most unsatisfactory, and that advertisers should be urged rather to sell their goods on their own merits than to endeavor to push the sale by casting any slur on other and perfectly legitimate articles of commerce.

NO "FAKE" ADVERTISING.

Contract Prevents Retail Merchants From Using Anything But Legitimate Methods.

> We, the undersigned merchants and business men of the City of Sedalia, hereby obligate ourselves one to the other, to do no card or program advertising for a period of one year from and after this date.

The above is the form of contract which is signed each year by the retail merchants of Sedalia, Mo., U.S.A., as a safeguard against what they consider to be fake advertisements. The purpose of the contract is to furnish the retailer with a legitimate excuse for not advertising in cook books, hotel registers, theatre programs, on livery barn clocks, cards to be hung in lodge rooms, in song books, etc., and the plan is said to save them thousands of dollars each year.

C. C. Lawson, secretary of the State Association of Retail Merchants is the originator of the scheme. His plan works thus: When a solicitor for advertising schemes, which will cost the merchant money and will bring no results, calls on a merchant he is told that the retailer is bound by contract not to do any advertising except that which is legitimate, such as newspaper advertising; is shown the contract and referred to Mr. Lawson, who is also secretary of the local association.

It does not take Lawson long to show the solicitor how impossible it is for any member of the association to violate the contract and the deal is off. This plan makes it easy for the merchant to turn down their best friends and customers when the latter come around asking for an advertisement for some so-called illegitimate proposition.

NEED OF GOOD BOOK-KEEPING.

A woman grocer in Manchester, England, recently had reason to regret her loose system of giving credit, and not keeping account. She sued a customer in the Manchester County Court for £4 14s. 4d., for groceries supplied, but as evidence of the debt, could only produce a scrap of paper relating to £1 14s. 4d. The other £3 she described as "back money"—evidently a long standing debt. Judgment was given for £1 14s. 4d.

Department in Aid of the Retail Grocery Clerk

Writer Thinks Employer Should Know Where and How Clerk Spends His Evenings—How Clerks Drift Into Bad Company and Spend Money Beyond Their Means —, Eventually They Lose Their Positions.

By a Retail Grocer.

Has a retail grocer a right to know where, and in what company his clerks spend their evenings? No doubt a good many clerks will laugh at the idea, but from what has come under my observation during years of experience, I take the ground that he should, and as The Canadian Grocer devotes several columns each week in the interests of the "boys behind the counter," I would like to hear from them on this question.

The grocery trade is undergoing a wonderful change. The old haphazard, go-as-you-please way will not measure up to the requirements of the times. Clerks can no longer graduate from the delivery wagon to a full-fledged clerk. He must learn the business. He must know the goods he is selling. His life must be in his work, and his aim must be to gain the respect and confidence of his employer and his customers.

To do this his evenings must be spent in clean company, and where his expenses are within his means. Drifting into bad company has ruined thousands of young clerks, and it is right here where he needs the guiding hand of his employer.

Employer Should Know.

The temptations of a young clerk are many and his dangers are correspondingly great. In his inexperience he thinks he can take care of himself, but he will learn his mistake when it is too late. Many a young man does his work well through the day, and the employer has reason to be well satisfied, but if his evenings are not properly spent he is sure to get into trouble, and when he does, he not only ruins himself but the employer loses the services of a man from whom he had a right to expect a profit. He therefore, for his own sake, has a right to know how his clerk spends his evenings, but besides his own, he should take enough interest in the success of his clerk to know when he drifts into bad and dangerous company. As soon as he does this, it means in nine cases out of ten that he is spending more money than he can afford, and he takes it from his employer. When I see young clerks spending money freely from evening to evening, I make up my mind that they will soon lose their position.

Led Him to Steal.

I know of a case where a clever young boy was employed in a store where he worked for several years, gave splendid satisfaction, was well liked and had excellent prospects before him. But at last he drifted into company where it was suspected that he was spending too much money, and in a short time he was found to take money from his sales. The poor boy had to leave his job, and was on the street. No one would employ him without a recommendation from his former employers, but he could not get one.

Knowing these dangers into which thousands of young men fall, it should be a part of the agreement when a merchant hires a clerk that he should know where and how he spends his evenings.

TOBACCO EXPERIMENTS.

Amherstburg, Sept. 25.—(Special)—Much interest is being taken by Canadian tobacco growers in the experiments now being conducted on A. R. Ferris' experimental farm in connection with the curing of Canadian grown tobacco, especially as these experiments, if successful, are expected to revolutionize the Canadian tobacco growing industry.

Last week two kilns were started curing under the direction of Felix Charlan, Dominion tobacco expert. It is expected that Mr. O'Halloran, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, will visit here to observe results from the first kiln. As soon as the cured leaf is taken out, it is ready to strip, and Mr. Charlan has a market ready for all that has been grown here this year.

If results justify the experiments, it is expected that kiln curing will become quite common in the tobacco belt of Essex and Southern Kent, replacing the old system. The kiln curing requires three days and three nights. Already individual farmers are doing some experimenting along the same lines.

TRADE NOTES.

The Reid, McIntyre Co., Albert, N.B., have recently purchased the general store business of J. C. Prescott, and as the company is a progressive one, a good trade should be done. Mr. Reid has for some years been in the banking business but decided to go back again into mercantile life. Mr. McIntyre has been in the employ of Mr. Prescott for the last seven years and is thoroughly posted in the business and known favorably to the many patrons of the store who are pleased to hear of his success.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—The people of Toronto are buying their fruit from thousands of retailers all over the city, and the best idea they can form of the excellence of the fruit is from what they see at the retail stores. Very few people know anything about the magnificent sight of the fruit of all kinds displayed at the fruit market every day. Would it not be a bright idea to let the retail merchants take possession of the market for one day. Let them buy up all the fruit and display it all over the market place? Have this as a free show of the fruit for one day, to which they would invite all their friends and customers. Each retailer would take charge of his own fruit, and could take orders as the people passed along. This could be made an annual affair, and would not only give the people an opportunity of seeing the best fruit show, but it would also add importance to the fruit trade. The fruit this year is exceptionally good, and it would certainly be a treat to the people to see more of it than what they see at the retail stores.

Peaches are very cheap. People seem to have their supply, or as many as they can take care of. Scarcity of fruit jars it is said also has its effect on the market. Plums are in abundance and are being sold at low prices. The receipts of grapes are increasing from day to day, and the quality is improving.

Lawtonberries are still arriving regularly each day and are selling for 5 to 6c. a box. Cranberries are receiving much favor, and have the advantage of being new on the market. Bahama grape fruit has made its first appearance, and Florida oranges are expected in about two weeks.

VEGETABLES—The vegetable in which we are all more interested than in any other is the potato, and from all reports it is an excellent crop all over Ontario, and prices are lower. Tomatoes are also ripening rapidly and the canners are getting a good average supply. A car load of onions came to hand from the other side. These were imported for less than our farmers are willing to sell, and are said to be of a better quality. The large quantity of evergreen corn which arrived in splendid condition shows that frost has done no damage.

LEMONS AND HEALTH

An Act of Parliament 30 & 31 Vict., c. 124, §4, provides that every ship going to countries where lemon juice cannot be obtained is required to carry sufficient to give every one 1 oz. daily. This insures their health in unhealthy districts. If you will use more Lemons you will spend less in Patent Medicine and Doctor Bills. The acid of Lemon kills disease germs and makes a refreshing drink, hot or cold. Mr. Retailer, tell your customer, in a short time you can double your sales.

PEACHES GO TO WASTE.

The drouth in the Niagara District during the past month has had a bad effect upon the peach crop. The hot weather ripened the peaches so rapidly that sufficient pickers could not be obtained, and it is estimated that carloads went to waste. Some growers stand to lose some of what this year was a record peach crop, simply because help is scarce, and the fruit will have to rot on the trees. Pickers are paid $1.75 and $2 a day, and board, a record price.

EXPENSE OF CANNING BEANS.

Cost a Canning Concern $5,000 to Harvest Ten Acres and Can the Crop.

The Picton Gazette.

The Bloomfield Packing Co., packers of the Quaker Brand of canned goods, have just finished the picking of a ten-acre field of beans, adjoining their factory in Bloomfield. The amount paid out in labor on this piece of land seems so much out of the common that they have furnished us with the items.

There were thirty-five tons of beans picked at 1c per lb., and the same price was paid for snipping the beans after being brought into the factory. This made a total of fourteen hundred dollars for these two items. For other labor, such as plowing, planting and hoeing and for the services of five men who superintended the picking and snipping of the beans, one hundred and fifty dollars was paid. For the labor concerned in the canning and labelling of these beans eleven hundred dollars was the amount of wages, making a total of twenty-six hundred and fifty dollars paid for labor alone on this field.

This same land was planted with beans last year and produced about the same quantity, so that in two seasons there have been over $5,000 paid out for labor alone on this ten-acre field. After picking these 35 tons, there are still eight or ten tons left on the vines, but these the company abandoned—wishing to reserve a little money to run the factory on other lines the balance of the season. —Picton Gazette.

Which will YOU do, hold the credit customer AND GET YOUR MONEY OUT OF HIM? Or lose both the customer and the money he owes you? The answer ought to be simple. There is ONE WAY to hold this class of customers, please them, and avoid loss. That way is by using the

A GROCER'S CO-OPERATION

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes gives a lustre which far outlasts all others under the heat of the stove, and that is why it has so many friends that call for it over the grocery counters the world around. We believe that the real live grocer wants to push the goods that please his customers, and that is why we have the hearty co-operation of thousands upon thousands of grocers everywhere. It pays you to push it.

MORSE BROS., Props. - Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

YOU MUST REALIZE that an article which has a huge amount of consumer advertising behind it to pull it through the stores, as has

2 in 1

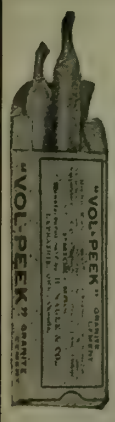
must be a profitable and quick-selling line to handle.

But, in addition to this ad-pulling force, "2 in 1" has sterling merit behind it. It preserves the boots and makes them pliable; is waterproof; shines quickly and lasts a long time; does not soil the clothes or clog the brush, and is just now in increasing demand.

You can't afford to be without "2 in 1" on your shelves.



The F. F. Dalley Co.
LIMITED
Hamilton, Canada, and Buffalo, N. Y.

A Great Selling Team

¶ Buyers must be moved through several steps to be brought to the buying point.

¶ They must have their attention attracted to the article. They must have their interest in it awakened. They must be informed as to its nature, utility and merits. They must be convinced of its value. They must be moved to action—to closing.

¶ Good salesmen and good trade-paper advertising make a great team to carry the buyer through these several stages to the buying point. Alone, the salesman is at a disadvantage.

Nine out of every ten people when troubled with a cough or cold call for Mathieu's Syrup.

Hence there is no time wasted in selling it. It almost sells itself. This is the result of its exceptional curative properties in all chest and throat complaints — backed up by good advertising.

This advertising consists of

1. Our newspaper campaign.

2. One person recommending it to another, and probably telling him that he got it at your store.

3. Dealers who know a good article when they see it and gladly recommend it to their customers and friends.

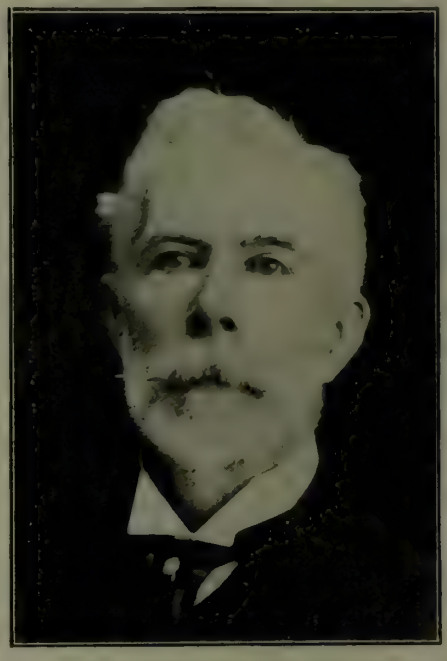
Resolutions Adopted Regarding Retailers' Rights

Short Weights, Fixing of Price to Consumers by Manufacturers and Fake Advertising Among the Questions Discussed by British Columbia Retail Grocers' Association —Who a "Consumer" is—Co-operation of Wholesalers to be Cultivated — To Push Goods With Assured Profits.

Victoria, B.C., Oct. 2.—Matter of much moment to the grocery trade in the Pacific Coast province were considered at length at the annual convention held here last week, of the British Columbia Retail Grocers' Association.

Among the important features was an address by J. J. Higgins, secretary of the Seattle Retail Grocers' Association, on the value of organizations to the grocery trade and the founding of a platform upon which to base united energies during the coming year.



Fred Carne, of Victoria, president of the association, occupied the chair, with Fred Welch, vice-president of Vancouver, assisting. The visiting delegates were: W. H. Walsh, R. Schilling, S. F. McCready, George Kyle, Frank McDowell, J. H. Williams, William Clark, George Hobson, J. Andrews, of Vancouver, and a large attendance of local grocerymen were present.

The first session was devoted to making arangements for the sessions, the local members asisting the visiting delegates. A visit was paid to the cold storage plant and warehouses of the B. Wilson Co., Herald Street, and after the inspection of these premises, escorted by local wholesalers, the grocers went for an automobile trip through the city. The exhibition was visited in the afternoon. The topic under discussion at the evening session was in regard to manufacturers maintaining retail selling prices on the articles they produce. Much discussion followed, in which the delegates took part freely. J. J. Higgins, secretary of the Retail Grocers' Association of Seattle, was called upon to address the convention on "The Benefits of a Grocers' Organization as Affecting the Retail Grocery Trade." H. G. Wilson, of Wilson Bros., also adressed the assemblage, giving his hearty approval to everything the grocers sought to accomplish. A committe on resolutions, consisting of Fred Welch and W. H. Walsh, Vancouver, and T. Redding, of Victoria, was appointed to draft resolution to be acted upon at this morning's session.

Short Weights Question.

At the session the following morning the officers for the ensuing year were elected, resolutions adopted and the platform of the asociation also read.

The short weights question took up a considerable time, and was discussed fully. On this J. J. Higgins, of Seattle, spoke, and called attention to the fact that in Canada things were put in boxes, that in the United States were put in tins. Once crackers could be bought by the pound, but now they could be bought only by the tin, and in this way they were cheated out of weight. Consumers think it is hard when they have to pay so much for a thing and have it under weight. They then complain to the retailer, but it is not his fault, as he, as well, is cheated out of the weight, and the bottom of it all is the manufacturers. When one buys a pound of butter it generally weights 14 ounces. If one complans, the maker will say that it shrinks considerably, owing to the water in it. Then the maker should allow for the shrinkage, and put in a little more.

T. S. FUTCHER, VICTORIA.

The Secretary Elected for Island of Vancouver.

As there is no law enforced regarding this, the manufacturers take advantage of it. Mr. Kyle and Mr. Andrews, both of Vancouver, spoke on this point also, and stated that the association should approach the Government with regard to the duty of the Dominion inspector of scales to have his duty enlarged so he would be able to inspect packages which hold short weight. The resolution which dealt with this matter was referred back to the committee for fuller action, and to have a number of other acts included.

Mr. Higgins also urged that the retailers should try and get a representative in parliament who would push any cause they had. He further urged that the retailers get in with wholesalers and invite them to their meetings so as to form a strong union.

The officers who were elected for the next term were as follows: President, Fred W. Welch, Vancouver; Vice-president, E. J. Wall, Victoria; Secretary for this Island, T. S. Futcher, Victoria; Secretary for the Mainland, R. D. Dinning, Vancouver; Directors, H. O. Kirkham and T. Redding, Victoria; F. McDowell, W. Clark and W. J. Andrews, Vancouver; legislative committee, President, F. W. Welsh, J. T. McDonald, Geo. Hobson and T. S. Futcher.

Aims of the Association.

Following is the platform of the association which was read:—

1. The education of all retailers and binding them together with intelligent knowledge for the purpose of upbuilding the retail grocery trade and placing it on a level where it belongs by eleminating waste, exchange of ideas, gaining confidence in each other, support of food laws, preventing cut-throat business methods, bringing the wholesaler and retailer closer together, etc.

2. We recognize the jobber as a necessary factor between the manufacturer and the retailer in the distribution of goods, and believe that when a manufacturer does sell to a retail distributor that a higher price should be charged than to the jobbing trade.

3. While recognizing the jobber as an intermediate factor, we believe that proper lines should be drawn clearly defining a wholesaler, and we recognize as such those who distribute to the retail trade only, thereby leaving the consumption trade for the retail distributer.

4. We recognize as retailers those who have regular established places of business, who distribute to the consuming trade in either large or small quantities, and do not consume the goods on the premises.

5. We class as consumers all who consume the goods on the premises where they are purchased, also where goods are distributed among help without a purchase price being charged, thereby placing all hotels, restaurants, grading or mining camps, city, county, state or national governments in the consuming class.

6. We believe in closer relation between the wholesaler and retailer, and are opposed to the formation of buying exchanges in those localities where the wholesalers confine themselves to the retail trade and support the manufacturers who establish and maintain retail selling values.

7. We believe that every manufacturer of a copyright article should establish a retail selling value based on commercial value, and prevent the drastic and deplorable price cutting practiced by unscrupulous dealers who help neither producer nor consumers, and promise our support to manufacturers who do establish retail selling values.

8. We believe that every retail dealer should give his unqualified support to manufacturers who do establish a consumer's price and do adopt the Pacific coast plan of a notice of such consumers' price put upon every case. We do not wish the price put upon the package of goods, but on the case and if the manufacturers so elect, put a store card on the inside of the case for display purpose in the store.

9. We recognize the rights of the producer to receive the highest compensation for his products, also the rights of the consumer to receive goods at the lowest possible cost, and believe that all manufacturers should take them into consideration in establishing retail values, only allowing the distributing element a proper amount to cover cost of distribution and legal interest on the money invested. We deplore the conditions forced upon us by many manufacturers, who give no profit and force the retail distributors to add extra profit on other manufactured goods or sell at a loss.

10. We are absolutely against any three, six or twelve months' rebate from manufacturers in any form. We also are against all free deals of any descriptions whatever and advocate the entire abolishment of this system.

Some Strong Resolutions.

The resolutions, which were read and adopted, were as follows :

Resolved, that we condemn the practice of all dishonest advertising and fake sales, and that we urge that a bill be prepared and introduced in our Legislature prohibiting such methods in business.

Resolved, that a uniform credit-rating system for the association of British Columbia is desirable, and recommend that a committee be appointed to report to the several associations a system for adoption.

Resolved, that the producer and manufacturer should distinctly define the lines between the two main factors in the distribution of food products, to wit : The wholesaler and retailer.

That we ask that the term wholesaler shall apply only to firms distributing to the retailing trade exclusively, and that the term retailer shall apply to all firms supplying consumers.

'Consumers' Defined.

That the term consumer shall apply to any factor who purchases commodities for consumption on his own premises ; therefore, it places in the consumers' class hotels, restaurants, boarding houses, camps of all kinds, railroads, sawmills and steamships. That in case of large transportation companies and other heavy consumers, arrangements may be made by local associations and the jobbers interested, satisfactory to both parties.

That we recognize that the wholesaler is entitled to receive from the manufacturer and producer a lower price than is made to the retailer.

That when a wholesaler distributes to the consuming trade he shall not be recognized as a retailer and be charged the retailer's price.

Resolved, that the British Columbia Association of Retail Grocers urges upon all manufacturers who market their goods under proprietary brands of trademarks, the wisdom of the policy of establishing and maintaining by contract a minimum retail price at which their products shall be sold to the consumer. We believe that this policy is not only for the best interests of the manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer, but also the consumer. We are opposed to any price being printed on the package, because of the wide difference of conditions that prevail in various localities.

Resolved, that we declare ourselves unalterably opposed to the practice of premium giving in any form, especially the packages and the coupon system of doing business employed by cereal manufacturers, believing that such schemes are unbusiness-like and should be condemned, and believing that any article of merchandise that will not stand on its own bottom and achieve success from its own merits should be withdrawn from the market and that the premium principle is wrong and demoralizing to legitimate trade, and

Whereas, certain manufacturers are continuing this practice, and in some localities refuse to abandon this method in defiance of the opposition of the retail grocers, therefore be it

Resolved, that we call upon these manufacturers who are continuing this method to desist, and that we use all our influence to discourage the continuance of such practice ; and be it further

Resolved, that we ask for the co-operation of the wholesale grocers to assist, by refusing to purchase or attempt to market the products of any manufacturer who places in his package a premium of any description or a coupon redeemable in cash or merchandise.

Secret Rebates Condemned.

Resolved, that we condemn the practice of giving secret rebates and free deals, as we deem them to be inimical to the best interests of the retail trade.

Resolved, that we favor the same policy of such manufacturers as market their goods to the retailers on a uniform price policy, giving the small grocer the same as his big competitor, and

Resolved, that we recommend to every fair-minded retailer the pushing of such goods as are sold on a basis of assured profit and equality of treatment for all retail grocers alike.

Resolved, that we express our sense of appreciation for the material and moral support of the trade press, manufacturers and wholesalers, commending the retailers to loyally reciprocate the favor to all known to be in active sympathy with measures to improve our conditions.

With respect to the resolution against premium giving, remarks were made that certain manufacturers spent $30,000 in premiums, which ought to go to the value of their present goods sold at the same money, thus giving the consumer more goods for the same amount paid.

General business was followed after the election of new officers. The peddling evil, which is so prevalent on coast cities, occupied much consideration. Eastern eggs were obtained by these peddlers and carefully candled. It was shown that these peddlers sold the best eggs from this action for local fresh eggs.

The visiting grocers expressed the appreciation of the local wholesalers for their kindness in escorting them through the city on an auto trip, which gave them a wider knowledge of the beauties of Victoria's residential district.

Wholesalers' Assistance.

A pleasant ending attended the convention when in the evening the members gathered around the banquet board at the Victoria hotel with J. B. Rickaby in the chair, as toastmaster. After the menu prepared had been done justice to F. Welsh gave a recitation and the toast was proposed to the visitors. Mr. Kyle of Vancouver, responding in the place of Mr. Higgins, who had been obliged to leave during the afternoon for Seattle. He said that he and his fellow visitors had been delighted with their reception and felt quite at home in Victoria. Simon Leiser referred in complimentary terms to the work of the grocers. He had been much impressed with the speech given the previous day by Mr. Higgins, of Seattle, who was a most able man. The wholesalers were united, he said, to get a fair profit for the grocer. The wholesale trade would always assist the grocers in fair dealing.

P. Wollaston referred to the relation of the wholesaler to the retail trade. A recitation was then given by Mr. Rickably. P. Wollaston contributed a song, and F. Carne and J. Patterson spoke to the toast of the retail grocery trade. Mr. McLean sang, and C. W. Rhodes, of Brackman-Ker, in a short address, said it was the aim of the company to make a fixed price for all the articles manufactured by them. This was the only way to make a fair profit for the dealer and protect the consumer. He advised the grocers to treat the consumer right and give fair prices and success would follow. Amid applause, he advised the grocers to protect their home manufactures. He looked for closer relations between wholesalers and retailers.

Mr. Popham followed, speaking of the enlargement of the plant of his company and its manufactures. The gathering dispersed about midnight, the majority of the mainland delegates leaving for home by the steamer Charmer.

TO ASSIST EXPORT TRADE.

The Department af Trade and Commerce at Ottawa announces its intention of compiling an Index of Canadian Manufacturers, Exporters, and Producers generally, who desire to extend their trade abroad. For this purpose it has sent out forms to be filled in and returned. The list compiled by the Department will be given the preference when the names of such Canadian firms are required by intending purchasers abroad. As the information is received at the Department it will be forwarded to all the Canadian Trade Commissioners in the various parts of the world, and be systematically indexed and be readily available in their respective offices.

Stanley Montgomery, a salesman for some time in A. L. Vanstone & Son's grocery and crockery store, Brantford, Ont., was one who was certainly appreciated. He is going to Calgary where he will become manager of a large crockery establishment, and prior to his departure from the Vanstone store, was tendered a banquet and presented with a traveling bag by the staff.

Successful Methods Adopted by Canadian Grocers

Brougham Merchant Careful About Weights and Measurements — Attention Attracted by a Peterboro "Fair" Window—How a Mail Order House Treats Its Customers—Toronto Counter-Salesman Gives Over-Weight—"Groceries Wanted" Book Given Away in Montreal.

A First Prize Window.

Montreal, October 5.—William Currie, a St. Catherines St. grocer, was the winner in a window display contest conducted by the Buffalo Specialty Co. Minor details, such as spacing, etc., added considerably to the effect. Taking into consideration that only one line of goods was shown, the window was rather an ingenious combination of the few different sized packages of goods arranged into a pleasing and attractive whole.

Stated Prices Must be Paid.

Brougham, Ont., October 6.—This village is small but this is an extra good farming section and by careful buying, close attention to business and keeping a well assorted stock of good goods at right prices, Geo. Philip, general merchant, has built up a trade that a more pretentious merchant might be proud of. They have a large refrigerator that keeps butter, lard, cheese and meats in fine shape. There should be one in every grocery department. They parcel up their own lard in one pound prints with their own printed wrappers, which makes it very handy and also a good ad. They have their own printed butter-wrappers that they supply free to their first-class butter makers. They do not handle much package tea but have a good line of bulk teas from 25c to 40c per pound, that they put up in one pound parcels, black, mixed and green and always keep it uniform. They grind their own coffee. They always have a space in their weekly paper and change their ads. every two weeks.

"It pays to advertise and to use price-tickets," says Mr. Philip. "We always give exact weight and measurement. We have prices marked on goods in plain figures and every one pays that price. We are always on the lookout for snaps and we give customers the benefit of the same which is one of the best ways of advertising and often gets new customers."

A "Fair" Window.

Peterboro, October 6.—Walter Fitzgerald, window dresser for White & Gillespie, struck a happy thought in a window he recently arranged. It was a suggestion of a country fair and was carried out in a bright manner. Some of the usual requisites of the ordinary fair were represented—race track, merry-go-round, booths and buildings. The suggestion was so manifest that it attracted general attention.

It seems a pity that some of Peterboro's grocers should not make use of their windows to better advantage. For some reason or other, there are grocers who leave their windows with the same showing for weeks at a time. Others are even worse and there are several who apparently do not give this important department attention except after a prolonged term, almost contemporaneous with stock taking. It it not a sign of modern methods and should receive more care.

Collections and Early Closings.

Kingston, October 6.—Tons of literature pour in from collection agencies which claim to collect any old accounts, catch the delinquent by the back of the neck and make him cough up. Results have not been over successful by any means. Two lawyers here, however, are kept busy. One attends to legal business, the other to collecting debts, giving all his attention to it. It is marvelous how successful he is, and strange to say he is reasonable in his charges.

It is hard to enforce the early closing by-law for some grocers claim to be in the fruit business if they only carry a bunch of bananas in stock. What is a grocer? That's the question.

Convenience in the Store.

Elora, Ont., October 6.—"China Hall," as George Maben has christened his store, has been transposed somewhat in the interior, in line with the proprietor's ideas of progress and convenience. To the right as you enter, the stock of choice China is shelved; in front every thing in the line of canned goods; and to the left dinner and tea sets, and other goods. A plate glass front is the one thing needful, and Mr. Maben feels that he would have a compact little store second to none of its class in a town the size of Elora. Recently, in one day, he had 130 baskets of fruit shipped in to him, and he feels confident he holds the record.

Grocery Stock Book.

Montreal, October 5.—A Montreal wholesale house is sending to all its customers, and to reputable grocers requesting it, a very handy little book. It is a blank book "Groceries Wanted," Which may be hung up and used almost every day in the average grocery. It is one of the neatest and most convenient stock books recently issued, the paper being very good, and a thick cardboard cover warranting its being kept in good condition.

The same firm is sending out printed booklets suggesting various lines which it might be necessary to order. After each grocery article mentioned is a space to specify, for the retailer's own information, the quantity desired. This booklet makes a good check on the stock book.

Salesman Gave Over-weight.

Toronto, October 6.—A few days ago a lady ordered half a pound of cheese with other things from one of the salesmen in a local grocery store. When she came home she thought the cheese looked rather large for half a pound and so, having a pair of scales she weighed it, and found that it tipped the balance at 12 oz. She looked at the bill and found that half a pound was charged, for which was paid 9c.

This is the carelessness The Canadian Grocer frequently finds among counter salesmen, especially in the City of Toronto where there are reasons to believe that the clerks need more brushing up than in any other place in Canada. Whether this is owing to want of close attention to business on the part of the grocer himself, or that it is harder to get the right kind of salesmen, we are not prepared to say, but it is safe to say that the standard required by grocers for clerks is entirely too low. There are plenty of salesmen who are nothing more than makeshifts, and they never will be anything else, for they make no effort to reach a higher level. There is no other occupation in which there are so many engaged for which they are so ill-fitted as in the grocery stores. They have no love for it, for the simple reason that they know very little about it. Their whole effort consists in hiding their ignorance and their unfitness by pretending to show their dislike to the business. Why then are youths allowed to hold these positions when they do not take any interest in the work, and which could be filled by better young men.

Many a grocer is kept in tight circumstances through the carelessness of his clerks who give 12 oz. for 8, and the "boss" is not wide enough awake to see it. But should an employer be obliged to keep an eye on his salesman to see whether they are careful in weighing? This was no mistake on the part of the clerk. He deliberately robbed his employer, and therfore is not honest, and is not fit to be in any store. Why did this boy do this? He gained nothing by it. He may have been too lazy to cut it to the right weight, or lacked the courage, or business training to explain to the lady that he cut more than half a pound and whether she would like to take it all.

Whatever might have induced him to do it, the most probable reason is that he never was trained to be strictly accurate in his work, and therefore does not understand the seriousness of being inaccurate.

The Mail Order House Methods.

Yorkton, Sask., October 3.—A mail order house catalogue received here lately states, "We do not quote prices on flour and sugar for two reasons. In the first place, they fluctuate so often that we cannot guarantee them for two months. In the second place, we feel that we cannot save our customers much money on either of these two commodities for the reason that they are sold nearly all over the country at a narrow margin of profit. If we were to quote the very lowest price that we could sell them for, you would save nothing by buying from us after you had added the cost of transpartation."

This is the policy under which they have always done business, yet money that should be spent in town finds its way into their coffers every day. How long would you patronize your local merchant if he adopted this policy towards you?

Humor Your Customers.

Montreal, Oct. 5.—Most of a grocer's customers are women, and, according to a St. Catherine St., Montreal, grocer, the use of tact is one of the essentials in successful service to them. Many times they will want some little extra attentions to satisfy some almost imaginary objections they have. Politeness, and willingness to put yourself out for them, almost invariably have their effect. They like to deal where they are best treated.

Corn Stalks in the Window.

Lindsay, October 6.—Ed Robson, of the west end grocery, dressed a neat and attractive window last week for the fair. It was a window advertising a breakfast food and a number of packages were scattered or rather arranged around the window along with green cobs of corn, while a good background was formed by large and tall stalks of corn.

Grocerymen during the fair days disposed of immense quantities of fruit. This is one of the strong lines. The grocers piled their fruit outside their store fronts and displayed it to advantage. In many cases they had a clerk doing nothing but selling fruit and he was kept busy.

Not Enough Care Taken.

Bracebridge, Oct. 6. — Considerable complaint is heard among our merchants about the way fruit is handled as freight during the rush of summer. Quite a saving is to be had with shipments by freight, owing to high express charges, if the freight, especially fruit, is taken right through. But up in this country we are up against it. Consequently the merchant and the people suffer through carelessness.

Buy in Large Quantities.

Lindsay, October 6.—This has been a good season, but it might have been better. The grocers of Lindsay would do well to form a sort of "combine" on the fruit question. This year they have had stiff opposition in the person of an Italian, who has conducted a good fruit store. The Italians, in many cases, can buy their fruit cheaper than the grocers, that is they get it in car lots and sell to their fellow countrymen. While there is only one Italian fruit dealer in Lindsay, he, no doubt, is organized with his fellow countrymen, also dealers in fruit, at different points in the province. Thus, he gets his fruit cheap and is able to sell accordingly. Why couldn't the grocerymen of Lindsay join together on the fruit question and buy by the car loads. They would then be able to compete with the fruit store.

Neatness in Shelf Arrangement.

Montreal, Oct. 5.—A very useful, but somewhat neglected, mode of displaying goods is by always having the shelves in a neat and attractive condition. As a Montreal grocer said recently, "it adds to the general effect on a customer entering the store, to see apparently plenty of everything neatly shown on the shelves." Perhaps they do not realize that it helps to bring them back to that store again, but it does. Neatness in a retail store always pays.

Jobbers Cutting Prices.

St. John, N.B., October 4.—There is some uneasiness among wholesalers in consequence of considerable price-cutting and an endeavor is being made to get the jobbers together and arrange a uniform scale of prices. The difficulty is said to be not only with the free lances but with members of the Grocers' Guild, as well. The system of every-man-for-himself is making it hard for travelers to satisfy their employers, as they continually have to face the argument of buyers who say, "Oh, we can do better with So-and-so."

Delivery Rigs Going.

Chatham, October 6.—Country storekeepers in this vicinity are talking seriously of taking their rigs off the road. Several of them appear to have reached the conclusion that the game is hardly worth the candle. City merchants have lost to a certain extent from this competition, quite a few farmers no longer coming to town, and this is credited in some quarters with having something to do with high egg and butter prices.

The Science of Service.

Winnipeg, October 5.—A. Frederick Sheldon, of the Sheldon School of Salesmanship, was in the city last week, and addressed the retail merchants on the evening of September 29. His subject was the "Betterment of Business," the keynote of which was his oft-repeated statement "the science of business is the science of service." He went on to show successful salesmanship depended upon the ability to serve the public. "Money will come," he said "as a natural consequence of serive; but if money is made the dominant idea, service will be lost sight of and anything but success will ensue."

His address was greatly appreciated and many clerks who heard his words carried away many good suggestions as to methods of developing self-efficiency in the trades in which they were engaged.

A Handle on the Parcel.

Montreal, Oct. 5.—A clerk was doing up a package of tea at a Montreal grocery, a few days ago. After tieing the string, he left two long ends, which he tied together to form a very neat handle. On being questioned, he said it was an English custom, and was very commonly in use in England. It is a good idea.

New Brunswick Broom Prices.

St. John, Oct 4.—The feature of the local wholesale markets last week was the sharp advance in the price of brooms and whisks. About three weeks ago there was an advance of about 15 cents, but on Friday last the quotations were jumped about 75 cents, on an average. In some lines the increase amounted to $1.00 a dozen, and on others, 50, 60 and 75 cents. T. S. Simms & Co., the local manufacturers, stated that the higher prices were due entirely to the scarcity of broom corn, there being very little stock to be had in the American market.

Not Telling the Truth.

Chatham, Oct 6.—Sweet potatoes made their appearance here. "That's just one of the things we have to fight against," remarked a grocer this afternoon. "That lady wanted to know why we were selling only 6 pounds of sweet potatoes for a dollar when other people were offering "genuine Jerseys" at seven or eight pounds for a dollar." And he added his little tribute to the temptation which grocers occasionally yielded to of mildly prevaricating when describing their goods.

TIN CAN PRICES ADVANCE.

Owing to the advance in the price of tin plate in the United States, due to the big strike, can manufacturers have decided to raise their prices on their general lines of goods. This, of course, affects the Canadian market.

The varying sizes of the cans are so diversified that it is impossible to give in percentage the extent of the advance. The new schedule covering tin plates, which went into effect the other day, raises quotations 10 cents per box, say from $3.40 to $3.50.

CANNED PEAS PRICES HIGH.

The canned peas situation is one of particular interest to the trade just now. More than a month ago The Canadian Grocer advised retailers to stock canned peas, as they were almost sure to go up. We know that many have taken the advice.

Peas have certainly gone up and are liable to go still higher. The situation may be best explained by the following story of an Ontario jobber. He sold a retailer his stock of peas some time ago, for future delivery. Usually the contract stipulates that at least 60 per cent. of the order must be filled, but in this case the jobber agreed to fill it entirely. The price he received was 77½ cents. Since that time, however, he offered to repurchase half the order at $1, allowing the grocer 22½ cents per dozen profit. The offer was promptly declined and that grocer stands a good opportunity to make money on his early purchase.

In many cases retailers would have "jumped" at such an offer, and this is just where they make the mistake. If the jobber can make a profit after paying a dollar for peas why cannot the retailer make a much bigger profit—and a legitimate one at that—after paying 77½ cents?

THE BROOM SITUATION.

In a recent issue The Grocer pointed out the abnormal advance in the price of broom corn to manufacturers. The fact that it went from $85 to $200 per ton was a natural reason for broom corn farmers in the United States to hold out for the high price and as a consequence not much has been marketed.

Canadian factories have felt this scarcity of corn on the market and recently four have had to stop manufacturing temporarily. Some have since obtained supplies.

The retailer has no doubt noticed the advance, for brooms that he could sell at 20 cents when broom-corn prices were normal, will now retail at least for 30 cents, and those which were formerly retailed at 25 cents will be nearer forty.

It is not to be expected that farmers will rush onto the market with their corn when prices are going up, so that no alleviation of the situation can be anticipated before January the first. It is, in fact, a possibility that prices will further advance.

The prices of short bristles used for stove and boot brushes, etc., have also recently advanced about fifty per cent. to the manufacturer, but as yet no changes have occurred in brush prices to the retailer. They may, however, be expected to rise about January. Bass, fibre and whisk show no advance.

LANGUAGE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.

A recent issue of Printers' Ink contains an interesting discussion on what would happen in a retail store if clerks talked to customers in the language of the ads. "What," is asked, "would be the effect of flowery phrases and glowing periods on prospective purchasers?" The article continues:

Whether it is that our ideas of what constitutes "good" advertising are undergoing a big change, or that people nowadays are influenced by a style of "talk" different from that which used to be considered sound, a kind of phraseology is creeping into present-day advertising that is overstrained, unnatural, exaggerated and empty, and that is surely tending to make advertising ridiculous.

Do we still believe with all the big thinkers of the advertising world, that in advertising you would write about your goods as you would speak of them face to face with a prospective customer? Is this dictum still an advertising axiom? You answer, "Of course it is." We all answer in the same strain.

But many of us continue blandly to write advertisements in the most bombastic language at our command. A ponderous style is objectionable enough in literature, and is doubly so in advertising copy.

Short, crisp sentences convey definite ideas. "If well-worded they are both clear and convincing. An elaborate piece of perfunctory rhetoric, on the other hand, overflowing, as it too frequently is, with words of unnecessary length and with alleged ideas that are little more than gross exaggerations which the advertiser himself does not believe and with which he cannot reasonably expect to convince even the most credulous of his prospective customers, is distasteful to the man of culture and incomprehensible to the busy man who is very properly unwilling to spend the time and effort necessary if he would discover the meaning which the writer is so ineffectually endeavoring to convey."

How's that for a horrible example? We might have written a longer or more involved sentence had we tried very hard, but it really isn't worth the effort. The books of Henry James can be consulted at almost any library.

But there is another kind of advertising language that should be avoided with almost equal care. We refer to that language of familiarity which so often breeds contempt. The following example of this kind of advertising is quoted literally from the announcement of a retail merchant in a Nebraska newspaper last month:

Stop and cool off. In the mad scamble to pile up the "cash" perhaps you lose sight of life. Maybe the dough worries you so much "living" don't enter into your life. It's the little luxuries, the little additions to life, that make the complete day, that mark the real man.

When you make a can of ice cream, sherbet or ices in a freezer, when you get a big platter of it in front of you and a spoon in your hand, when it's so hot that it melts the "freeze" just a little,' when all these come together, then you know life. Tastes good, now, don't it? Drop in or telephone for an ice cream freezer.

It may be that this merchant's customers are a rough-and-ready lot, but we believe that his advertising literature might be couched in somewhat more elegant diction without offending their sensibilities. And if this editorial should come to his notice, we hope that his own sensibilities will not be offended, either.

SCARCITY IN SEALERS.

In many places there is a scarcity of fruit sealers, grocers not being able to obtain a sufficient quantity to supply the demand. This is apparently becoming an annual event during the preserving and pickling season, as each year more fruit and pickles are being sold by grocers for preserving purposes.

It seems that few anticipate the situation and many when they want the gems badly cannot get them. Last year the supply of pints gave out in many places, but this year quart sealers seem to be more scarce.

LET NOVA SCOTIA MERCHANTS BE ON THE ALERT

In some provinces of the Dominion many are wondering why they cannot get as cheap school books as may be secured in Ontario. Those who have made a study of the matter, however, possess the knowledge why Ontario readers are supplied at such low prices, and no surprise will be expressed when it is realized the vast amount of advertising the company which publishes the books receives. It simply means that the T. Eaton Co. can afford to print the school books at a figure stated by experts to be less than cost, and charge the loss to the "advertising expense" account.

And this is money well expended. For every school-book published for use in Ontario public schools bears the imprint of the T. Eaton Co. Not only that, but the publishers have the privilege—and are known to be making use of it—of enclosing advertising matter with enquiries from parties sending for school-books. This has been shown to be a fact in a previous issue of this paper. It simply means that the legislature of Ontario, unconsciously, no doubt, has been the means of placing in the hands of a large mail-order house more power to draw from every district in Ontario the wealth that should be expended among merchants of those districts.

The direct consequence is that the retail merchants in Ontario who handle a considerable portion of school-book supplies are taken an unfair advantage of. The contract has the effect of taking the sale of school books out of the hands of the general stores of Ontario, and of bringing almost every home into contact with the mail-order house. It affects every class of merchant in the province.

It is interesting to note in this connection that in Manitoba, the Government of that province has recently awarded the contract for a series of readers to a regular publishing firm, not to a mail-order house, and not at departmental store prices. No doubt the Government of that province could have secured just as favorable terms as Ontario. Previous to the time of the awarding of the contract, however, the retail merchants held meetings and passed resolutions urging the Government of Manitoba not to place the contract with a mail-order house, at the same time pointing out the unfair methods of competition and the injury to business generally, which would result should Manitoba follow the example of Ontario.

Nova Scotia is the next province to be considered. An effort is being made to secure cheap school books for that province, in view of the low prices in Ontario, and unless the retail merchants there begin early to point out to the Government the undesirable consequences of giving such a contract to a mail-order house, they will be up against the same difficulty as is now experienced by Ontario merchants.

No time should be lost in following the example of Manitoba. Let the merchants of Nova Scotia unite at once and proclaim their rights; for it is an acknowledged fact that the retail merchant is the back-bone of any community, and that once his influence decreases the standing and importance of the community does likewise.

It does not seem probable that the T. Eaton Co. would accept such a contract as it did in Ontario, if it were going to lose money. There is no other object in sight but that the contract was signed and carried out for the advertising it contained. That the successful contractors for the Ontario readers have attained their object would seem to be fairly well demonstrated by the fact, that we do not hear of their publishing or offering to publish other school books at cut rate prices. The close touch with the people and their homes is sufficiently well obtained through circulating a series of readers bearing their trade mark, without their establishment incurring any further losses through supplying cheap books for the whole of the school course.

Nova Scotia merchants are therefore advised to be on the alert. Quick and decisive steps should be taken to see that no mail-order house that will use "cheapness" as a blind to circulate its advertising literature among the homes of the province, is given the contract.

DANISH BUTTER TOO HIGH.

English importers are not well satisfied with the manner in which they are treated by the Danes in the matter of butter shipments. The claim is that Danish butter is being handled by them with little profit while the Danes themselves are making large profits.

An English journal lays the blame to the Danish Quotation Committee which it says has intentionally or unintentionally in recent years "plucked" the large English buyers to some tune by putting up the price when the market did not warrant it. During one week alone a sum of £8,000 went to the Danes to which the English importers were entitled.

It was generally conceded that the Danish butter trade had been conducted, from the merchants' point of view, on very unprofitable and unsatisfactory lines for many years.

So annoying did this situation become that a deputation of buyers was dispatched to Denmark to make inquiries and to attempt to set things right.

To quote from the trade journal: "Since the return of the deputation, however, our representative has interviewed one or two of the gentlemen who represent British interests, and we have reason to hope that there will be some improved arrangement. If there is not one thing is certain—that the importers and wholesalers will do all they can to foster the importations from other quarters. As they say, what is the use of handling Danish for practically nothing."

Here is a splendid opportunity for Canadian butter exporters to advance their connection with Old Country buyers. They have been and no doubt are now in a receptive mood and would do much to increase butter importations from Canada. While the home consumption of Canadian butter is rapidly increasing yet Canada, being a natural agricultural country, is naturally a dairy country and could well afford to build up a strong trade relationship with the mother country in butter as well as in cheese.

UNITED EFFORT NEEDED.

The report of the annual convention of the British Columbia Retail Grocers' Association in this issue illustrates with undoubted force the value of trade organization.

A perusal of the platform of the Association and the resolutions adopted shows conclusively that the members who attended the sessions came away wiser men. The great trade questions of the day came up for discussion. Retailers with any ability whatever cannot fail to be benefited in their own private business as well as in general through the strength of the organization.

A retail merchant alone has no power to effect remedies where trade conditions are against him; there must be united effort or nothing can be done. Education upon existing conditions is needed and the Association is one of the best available places to secure it.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR BANK ACCOUNT.

In speaking to a prominent banker of Montreal who handles a great many grocers', and other retailers', accounts, he said that the average man does not realize how many inquiries are made regarding his business standing. If he did, he would not take the chances with his credit that so many do.

It very often means that, on the bank's report, a man is compelled to pay cash for any goods he may buy, when, by the exercise of a little care, he would have had sufficient credit for any purchases he desired to make. Talk to your banker at the first good opportunity and keep in touch with him.

Department in Aid of the Retail Grocery Clerks

Indifference of Employers in Regard to Training Their Clerks —Many Not Taught to Make Out a Decent Bill—Advice Must be Given and Taken.

By A. H. Harvey.

One of the weakest features in the grocery business is the indifference on the part of the grocers in regard to the fitness of their salesmen. While there are many excellent salesmen, it is nevertheless a lamentable fact that a good many cannot make out a decent bill, and are even unreliable in their figures.

Their penmanship is wretchedly bad, and their English is still worse. What kind of stuff is a grocer made of, who can see a poor inexperienced boy waste his time without pointing out to him the importance and value of self-improvement? Does he not know that with a little encouragement on his part the boy will soon be worth much more to him as an employee, without saying anything of the good he will do to the boy. Any boy who will not take advice on this line is not the boy that is wanted in a grocery store. Get rid of him. It is a very good thing for a grocer to look after his cash, stock, bookkeeping, etc., but if he employs salesmen and does not know how to handle them, he stands a poor chance to make money.

Take Interest in the Salesmen.

There are grocers who get more work from two salesmen than others do from three, and the men do it more cheerfully and with less fatigue. No one, however, can do this if he is selfish and only seeks his own interest. If he expects the salesman to take an interest in his business, he must also take an interest in the clerk's welfare. The old fashioned "slave driver" idea is past, and men must learn to deal with one another as men. Because the one has more money than the other does not mean that he has a right to treat him with disrespect.

While it is yet altogether too much the case that men are rated according to the money they have, we are, however, happily growing out of it and regard the value of men for the amount of manliness they possess.

It therefore belongs to good business management for a grocer to see that his salesmen are constantly trying to fit themselves better for the work they are expected to do. In doing this, the clerk must understand that this is for his own benefit, as well as for the benefit of his employer. When he realizes this, he will become more industrious, more faithful, and more willing to do his best for his employers. It is not enough to let the salesman know that you expect him to do his best, but the employer with his experience must know how to guide and lead him in the way he should go.

Think of the salesman and even grocers themselves placed in positions where they are to handle hundreds of different articles of food, dealing with hundreds of people, having nothing to learn, and no need to improve themselves.

An Education Needed.

An ordinary mechanic who is making only one article, is trying from day to day to make it better, but the grocer who should understand his goods, his profits, his books, his people and thousands of other things, is absured enough to think that he has nothing to learn and no time to read, in order to fit himself better to fill the position he occupies. What chance has a young man under such influences to develop into a valuable help in a store and stand a chance of becoming a successful salesman? If a youth takes a position in a store and he does not turn out right, the fault, in many cases, lies with the employer.

A business man's sphere is not only to supply people with goods, but he is also responsible for the success of his clerks by giving them a good sound business training. He must overcome prejudices and antique ideas, and show the advantages of more improved and better methods. He must learn to enlighten and educate them to be of the greatest possible benefit to himself and this can be done only on the right lines, which is through honesty, sincerity and courage.

A New Flour Introduced Into England Made From the Soya Bean—Tests Made With Baker's Flour — Cashew Nuts and What Use is Made of Them.

Recent issues of a British milling exchange have devoted considerable space to a new breadmaking material now being introduced into England. It is a flour made by grinding the Soya bean of Manchuria. Formerly the Soya bean was principally used for the extraction of oil, but during the Russo-Japanese War it was tried by the soldiers of the Mikado as a food stuff, and it is stated, with excellent results.

An analysis of the Soya bean shows an average of about the following constituents: Water, 12 per cent.; oil, 17 per cent.; albuminoids, 38 per cent.; carbohydrates, 22 per cent.; fibre, 5 per cent.; ash, 5 per cent.; sand, 1 per cent. A firm at Hull, England, has used Soya flour for breadmaking purposes, mixing one part with five of white flour. The flour is of a yellow color and cannot be bleached, but it is reported that several German millers have blended it with rye flour, making a fine flavored "black" bread.

Baking tests with the Soya flour show it to produce the best results when mixed with 5 parts of baker's flour. The great food value of Soya flour has led to many experiments with it. These seem to indicate that the best field for its use is biscuit-making. The Soya bean has been raised in England and parts of the United States as a forage crop for a number of years and the experiments with it as a human foodstuff cannot but arouse interest.

The Cashew Nut.

The cashew nut tree yields several products. One edible part is the swollen, pear-shaped stalk (peduncle) which supports the nut. The kernel of the nut when roasted is eaten as food by the natives. The nuts are ash-grey in color and kidney-shaped and attached to the under part of the fruit.

The cashew-apple oil is powerfully vesicating or blistering, and is obtained from the cashew apple. The oil is not unlike that obtained from the marking nut. A gum also exudes from the cashew-nut tree when "tapped" or wounded when the sap is going up. The gum looks like gum arabic, and may be used as a substitute for that gum. The gum is subastringent and is particularly useful in guarding against the depredations of insects.

A light yellow oil, sweet tasted and edible, is obtained from the cashew nut. The kernels are roasted and then expressed. This oil is regarded by Indian chemists and native doctors as equal if not superior to either olive or almond oil. Little of this oil is made, however, for the reason that the nuts are in high favor as table fruit. In Bengali the cashew nut is called "hidgili badam," and in Hindustani "caju."

It has alternate, obtuse, ovate leaves and bears bunches of red secented flowers. The juice of the stem is used as a varnish and an aromatic drug is prepared from several parts of the tree afterward consolidated by evaporation.

The shell consists of three layers, the outer and inner of which are hard and dry, but the intermediate layer contains a quantity of black, extremely acrid, caustic oil, which is destroyed by roasting the nuts before eating them.

Fire which broke out in one of the grocery stores of E. F. Mason & Co., Peterboro, Ont., on Sunday morning last did $8,000 damage to the stock. Insurance to about half that amount was carried. Other merchants suffered to the loss of $7,000. Mr. Mason has two other grocery stores in Peterboro.

A Fable of the Grocery Store—A Short Cut to Wealth

By. W. E. Elliott

The grocer stood in his place of business, surrounded by his complete and up-to-date stock of canned goods, pure spices and pickles. The aroma of codfish and coffee blended in the air. In a prominent position hung a card bearing a chastely executed design: "Terms Cash."

A small boy came in with a subscription list for the King Edward Baseball Club. The grocer handed him ten cents and he went out.

A woman came in and asked the grocer if he had any granulated sugar. She asked what made it so dear, and the grocer said it was on account of the Spanish War. The woman ordered two bars of washing soap and a half gallon of coal oil. She wanted it sent down right away, because she had to do a little baking.

The next was a young lady with brown eyes and a white parasol. She was selling tickets for the church social. The tickets were only 25 cents. The grocer said he would like very much to go, but he had an engagement for that night. The young lady said he could give the tickets to one of the clerks.

A lady came in for a package of radish seed. She said she had never tried any of Smith's and asked the grocer if they would grow. He said that the Smith firm had a good rating in Dun's, and that the senior partner was a pillar in the Baptist church, and that every seed was tested by a special process before being offered to the public. The woman said she though it was a little early yet for planting, anyway.

The telephone rang, and a voice said: "This is the bank; that draft of yours on Skinner & Co. has been returned. Will you be down before three o'clock?"

A farmer lady from out on the fourth concession drove up to the door, and the grocer tied her horse and carried in the basket. She asked what he was paying now for eggs. She said they were paying more in Bingville, because Henry's woman was up there last Wednesday and got that much. The grocer said the market had dropped since then. When he counted out the eggs, she said there must be more than that, for she put them in herself. She said she would take the cash to-day, because she had got what little things she needed from the peddler. She asked the grocer for a little box to set a hen in.

An elderly gentleman came in hurriedly, and asked to borrow the rig for a few minutes. He said he was much obliged.

Following this was an agriculturist who hit up the biscuit barrel and said he'd be dinged if he thought either of them fellows discovered the North Pole. He said he had a goose in with him, and asked how much the grocer was paying. The storekeeper asked if it was a young one, and he said he was not sure, but they got it for a young one a couple of years ago. The agriculturist bought three cents worth of candy for the young ones and told the grocer to put in lots of gum drops.

Just then a little girl brought in a parcel of butter and said it was bad and her mother wanted some Real Good sent down right away in time for supper.

The next was a sad-looking man in a suit of clothes that had been worked in a great deal. The grocer sized him up as the man who had come to read the electric light meter, but he chirked up some and said it was a fine day, just to be polite. The sad-looking man laid down two double sawbucks on the counter and asked the grocer to put the twenty on his account. Joy seldom kills, and the grocer retained presence of mind enough to write a receipt. Then he gave the cat a large piece of jellied tongue and presented the delivery boy with the church social tickets.

Moral: It isn't as easy as it looks.

GENERAL MANAGER DEAD.

Much Regret Felt at the Early Death of Amos H. Baker, Picton, Ont.

A brief reference was made in last week's issue to the death of a man whose vacant chair, both at his home and in the establishment of which he was the general manager, will be regretfully cherished. Amos H. Baker, general manager of the Old Homestead Canning factory, Picton, Ont., was known to the trade as a leading factor in the canning industry of the Dominion. His modern factory equipment and modern methods which he secured after much study and travel, stamped him as a keen business man.

His affable nature and kindly disposition made him a good companion and friend and his early death will be much regretted in many circles.

He was only 44 years of age, but had been in failing health since the early spring. During the summer his condition became somewhat improved and it was thought he was regaining his health and strength. But about two weeks prior to his death he began to fail rapidly. He had been confined to his bed only one week, however, until he finally passed away on Wednesday morning of last week, the immediate cause of his death being a hardening of the arteries—a rare disease with a man of Mr. Baker's age.

His position in the commercial world brought him prominently before the public. He was an associate of many keen business men throughout Ontario and was generally admired for his sagacity.

Mr. Baker went to Picton, Ont., about 25 years ago to take his initial step in the business world. He was first employed by the Rathbun Company as a book-keeper, later severing his connection with that company to accept a similar position with A. W. Hepburn. After a lapse of eight years he branched out for himself, his first venture being a livery. This he maintained for a short time before entering the grain brokerage business with Geo. Sexsmith.

It was about ten or twelve years ago that Mr. Baker suddenly came into the limelight of publicity. He with Louis Wright, made a successful 'corner' in the output of canned corn. Corn was a short crop that year, and these two men quietly bought up the entire pack of canned corn from the canning factories of Canada. The result was one of the most clever 'corner' deals that had been exploited in Canada. Near friends of Mr. Baker, who were somewhat intimate with the details estimate that in the neighborhood of $30,000 was cleared up in that one deal.

Mr. Baker was the prime mover in the project of the Old Homestead Canning Company, which was first mooted about five years ago. The factory was backed by the Richardsons of Kingston, and Mr. Baker assumed the general managership of the concern.

The late Amos Henry Baker was born at Deseronto. His father was the late Richard H. Baker, a one-time grain dealer, and his mother was a sister of Amos Richardson, M.P.P. of Deseronto. Mr. Baker was the only child. The deceased is survived by his widow, and one daughter, Miss Marguerite Baker, who has been attending University of Toronto. His mother was at her son's bedside throughout his last illness.

The Canadian Grocer extends its sympathy to the family and close friends of the deceased and regrets exceedingly his early death.

Syrups have all risen slightly, as one man expressed it, "just gone back to normal."

Apples are coming in freely and general indications are that the crop will be fairly heavy.

DRIED FRUITS—Mediterranean qualities show no marked change since last week. Buying is fairly good in anticipation of the sailing of the last direct steamer. California fruit market has strengthened considerably and buyers are beginning to realize that they can no longer purchase at their own prices. There is an extreme shortage of apricots in the San Joaquin section, from which the bulk of mixed cars are shipped.

It is estimated that 75 p.c. of the entire peach and prune crop has been sold and prices of these goods will be maintained.

There is a better feeling in the primary raisin market, though there is no pronounced advance. Reliable authorities assert that advance must take place before the end of the month, as many buyers have not covered their requirements.

SPICES—Spices remain steady at present prices. Demand for peppers is extra good, owing to some fear of a further rise.

One matter, particularly interesting to spice dealers, is a draft of a new law which is being passed around. It deals with the adulteration at present indulged in by some importers and jobbers, and will, if passed, impose a fine of $500, six months' imprisonment, or both. All dealers interviewed admit the need of such a law and are heartily in favor of it.

MONTREAL.—Some figures are at hand on the total peas pack for the season. As compared with last year only 50 per cent. of the quantity of standards, 15 per cent. of sweet wrinkled and 10 per cent. early Junes have been put up. Demand is good for most lines. Tomatoes are likely to advance soon.

TORONTO.—The feeling in canned goods is very firm with an upward tendency. Peas are well worth a dollar, and very few are held by any wholesale house. Some would buy back what they sold at 77½c for $1. They are nearly all in retailers' hands and as they have been fortunate enough to secure them at the low price, they should have sense enough to retail them on the basis of their present value. This extra profit belongs to them, and they are justly entitled to it, and in consideration of the other fellow who has to buy them at the present price, it would be unfair, and beneath the dignity of modern storekeeping to sell them at only a fair living profit on first cost.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Dried Fruits—New arrivals.
Spices—Good demand.
Nuts—Scarcity in some lines.
Evaporated Apples—Prices high.

The wholesale grocery trade is growing in interest as the fall approaches, and the green fruits are getting out of the way. Dried fruits of all kinds are now in order to make their appearance and which the wholesale grocer takes under his care. Valencia raisins, as well as table raisins, have arrived and are put on the market at about the same as last year.

Prunes, however, are likely to be higher and not as good in quality. The sizes will be smaller and they were also somewhat damaged in drying through frequent rains. Prospects are good for the winter trade.

SUGAR—The sugar market is still strong and the demand fairly brisk. The market is steady and no changes are expected for some time.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES—There is so little to say about these articles at the present time that a little story told by a retailer instead will be allowable. He once kept store in a country village where farmers were in the habit of bringing jugs to be filled with molasses which had to be done with a funnel. This was such slow work that the farmer got tired waiting. The next time he brought a pail and asked the clerk to fill it with molasses. The clerk went to the cellar to do it and after again waiting a long time he went down himself to see what he was doing, and here he found the bright clerk working the molasses out of his quart measure through the funnel into the pail. He gave him such a shock that he tumbled to the idea that he might pour it right out of the measure into the pail.

DRIED FRUITS—Some of the dried fruits are beginning to come in. Valencia raisins are in and are of a good quality. New prunes will not be for a few weeks and they will be a little higher. Reports from California state that rain has retarded the prune crop considerably. The damage so far is merely problematical.

TEA—The tea market has for some time been on the climb, and gradually goes up higher. The feeling is very firm.

COFFEE—Coffee is in good active fall demand, but no changes in any of the lines.

RICE AND TAPIOCA—Nothing of any importance has taken place in these lines, more than the crop of Patna rice is short and higher prices will be asked for it.

SPICES—This is the harvest for the spice men and their business is all they can handle. Peppers are firm, and look for more money.

EVAPORATED APPLES—"They are away up in G," was remarked by one of the dealers. This is rather strange but it is explained in this way. BEANS—New beans are beginning to come in, and are of a high quality, and in good demand. The high price on account of their scarcity which ruled, until the new crop came in, has to give way, and they are now worth about $1.85 per bushel.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

The "Tea and Coffee Trade Journal" of New York, in an article on the choosing of appropriate names to be used as a trademark for any line of goods says: "A name easy to remember, that in advertising and demonstrating can be made to associate as near as possible with the article itself, is commendable. For instance, the moment we hear the word "Uneeda' we are reminded of biscuits, the word Sapolio suggests soap, "Salada" suggests tea, etc." This shows what a figure "Salada" cuts in the United States. The actual sales of "Salada" Tea for the past week were the largest in the history of the company. "Salada" is fairly modest about this, but the fact may appeal to live grocers as being significant to say the least.

W. H. Millman & Sons have received two consignments of new crop white beans—first of the season. The sample is fine. They have also received several lots of new evaporated apples—first of this seasons pack.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, are advertising this week their special shipments of dried fruits, which will be in within the next few days. These goods include currants, Valencia and Sultana raisins, Malaga table raisins, figs, candied peels and evaporated fruits, and are all guaranteed by the house to be of first quality. The prices which are being quoted are such as to cause buyers to hesitate before placing their orders elsewhere, before seeing the samples of goods offered by this firm. Next week Laporte, Martin & Co. promise a special announcement of interest to the trade on the subject of canned goods.

Snowdon & Borland, Montreal, are now selling a number of specialties put up by L. H. Packard & Co. These include their Brass Polish, Silver Polish, Varnish Remover and Knew Method Cleansing Jelly.

Pint Sealers Sales are Now Displacing the Quart

Reasons Why the Housewife Considers Them More Convenient —Preserves Are not Wasted—Grocers Prefer to Sell the Smaller Variety Because Profits are Greater.

By Victor Lauriston.

The pint sealer seems to be coming more into vogue than heretofore.

A good share of this poularity seems to be due to the fact that pint and quart tops are now identical in size, with the result that only the one size of rubber ring is required.

Nevertheless, there are a host of good reasons why the small sealer should be the best seller. The chief of these is that in the long run it saves the housekeeper its entire cost many times over.

On the face of it, this seems incorrect. The pint sealer sells for 75c a dozen; the quart sealer, containing double the amount of fruit, sells for only 85c or 90c. It would seem like economy for the housekeeper to buy the larger size, thus necessitating the use of only half as many jars as would be required if pints were purchased. Further, the purchase of half gallon sealers at a price only a fraction more than that paid for the quarts would seem still more economical.

The use of a big sealer involves, however much waste. It takes a pretty hearty family to demolish the contents of a pint sealer without leaving a trifle for supper; while, for the small family, the pint will suffice for several meals. No family wants the same kind of preserves every time the table is set. As a result probably one fourth of the contents of the regular quart is set aside to spoil; while, on the half gallon the loss is even greater. There is scarcely a pantry shelf in the land that hasn't two or three quart or half gallon sealers with a couple of inches of preserves in the bottom crowned with a quarter or a half inch of fuzzy white mildew.

Affords a Variety.

Then there is another point. The tasty housewife, the one who likes to set a table that will please her family and her guests, speedily learns that variety is the spice of life, and that constant change of menu is the best way to keep those about her in good spirits. She does not want the same preserves two days in succession. Neither can she see the sense of wasting a quarter of the contents of every quart jar. Hence, she will buy pint jars, have enough preserves for dinner with a trifle possibly for supper and breakfast—and be able to put on something different next day.

I know several families which, at the outset of housekeeping, bought quart or even larger jars. They are reverting to pints—nothing but pints. These two reasons tell the whole story.

If it is better for the housekeeper to buy pints instead of quarts, the grocer, who stands to secure two profits instead of one should have no kick coming. He may find it worth while to push the sale of pint jars a little. He should not argue the point—there is no use arguing with a woman—but is is within his power to incidently remark that pints are becoming more popular; and to add that it is because they are the most convenient size, save many times their original cost in fruit that would otherwise be wasted, and—do not compel the tasty housekeeper, who likes to set a nice and attractive table, to put fruit on the table for days and days, after everyone has grown sick of the sight of it.

W. O. McPherson was a Valuable Representative of the Geo. E. Bristol Co.

In last week's issue mention was made of the sudden death of W. O. McPherson, at Gravenhurst, Ont., a traveler for Geo. E. Bristol & Co., Hamilton, Ont. He was a member of the old school of knights of the grip, and his familiar face will be greatly missed off the road.

In 1883, Mr. McPherson joined the traveling staff of the Geo. E. Bristol & Co., then known as Lucas, Park & Co. He has continued with it ever since over the same route that he always traveled; that is, up around Barrie, Orillia, Owen Sound and Collingwood, and through the Muskoka country, Bracebridge, Huntsville, etc. He was a thoroughly reliable, upright, sterling business man, devoted to his duty, and a very valuable representative.

He resided at 65 Major Street, Toronto, from where the funeral was held. Peter Hutchison, a Bracebridge grocer, who was a warm personal friend of the deceased, attended the funeral.

Contends that Sugar Planters Have a Combine

R. E. Harris, Director of a Canadian Sugar Refinery Company, Lays This Charge Against West India Growers and Gives His Reasons—Canada's Preference of Thirty-one Cents Goes to Producers He Says—How Refining Industry Can be Killed in Canada.

Special Correspondence.

Halifax, Oct. 4.—The Imperial Royal Commission met here last week, and discussed with Halifax merchants trade relations between Canada and the West Indies. The sugar question was perhaps the most important that was considered, and the statement that the planters have a combine to control the prices, caused considerable surprise.

A comprehensive address on the question of raw sugar importations from the West Indies to Canada was delivered by R. E. Harris, K.C., one of the directors of the Acadia Sugar Refining Company. He took the stand that any reciprocal trade arrangements made between the two countries should not include sugar without safeguard afforded Canadian refiners of being able to import twenty per cent of their requirements from foreign countries under the same terms as from countries to which the British preference is applied. Mr. Harris declared that there was a combine of West Indian planters to extort unduly high prices from the Canadian refiners. He showed that all the leading planters in the south last year sold their sugar through the one broker in London, and instancing also the fact that prices in Halifax were much above the equivalent price charged in Greenock and New York, claimed that this clearly proved there was a combination to "squeeze" the Canadian refiner. What Mr. Harris declared to be proof of this assertion, he also submitted, a statement of the West Indian Committee that there was no combination, although for a short period last year two or three Demerara firms co-operated to the extent of notifying each other contemplated sales and prices.

Claims a Combination.

In view of the fact that these two or three firms, export the great bulk of the sugar, and that the one broker handles all their sales, Mr. Harris asserts that this proves his contentions completely. To the assertions of the planters that the Canadian refiners have buying agreements, Mr. Harris entered an emphatic denial and he cited the prices paid by his company between September, 1907, and April, 1909, in support of this. During that time the price of West Indian sugar to his company had advanced thirty-two and one-half cents, while during the same time the price in the English markets had only advanced fourteen cents and in the United States markets but one-half cent.

This "co-operation" of the West Indians merely meant, so Mr. Harris asserted, that the whole of the preference of thirty-one cents which Canada gives to British grown sugar, goes into the pockets of the West Indian grower, for the West Indians jumped the price of their product to that extent. The producers of raw sugar had practically said: "We will not sell sugar to Canadian refiners unless we get the whole of the market price, plus the thirty-one cents preference." Canada's raw sugar practically all comes from the British West Indies, and by this action the refining industry here was seriously imperilled. The situation had been much alleviated by the refiners being permitted to import twenty per cent. of their total requirements from foreign countries under the British preferential duty of 52½ cents, thirty-one cents lower than the general tariff duty. If any trade agreements were entered into between Canada and the West Indies which did not give this privilege to the Canadian refiners, Mr. Harris stated that it would result in the extinction of the refining industry in Eastern Canada. The competition which they experience from British refineries indicates that.

In conclusion, Mr. Harris summed up his case as follows: I think I have in the figures and statements which I have given you, proved conclusively:—

"That a combination did exist in 1908 and early in 1909, for the purpose of putting up the price of sugar to the Canadian refiner, and that the effect of that combination was to compel the Canadian refiner to pay the producer the whole and sometimes more than the whole of the preference.

"It is clear that without the protection given by the act of 1909 (permitting the importation of 20 p.c. of their requirements from foreign sources at British preferential rates) the West Indian producer has it in his power to kill the refining industry in Canada and I think I have given sufficient reasons for the attitude the directors of the Acadia Sugar Refining Company have assumed at the present time when they say they are absolutely opposed to any trade arrangement with the West Indies the price of which is the repeal of the privileges granted by the act of 1909."

Questioned by Lord Balfour of Burleigh, Mr. Harris said the Canadian refiners paid the West Indian planters more than one-half of the preference ever since it came into force. They do not want to pay him any more than they can help. He should not get more than he has got in the past—one half. This would be a fair division.

THE "OLD STORE COMPETITION."

Allen, Taylor & Co., proprietors of the Waterloo (Que.) Iron Works, are occupying and carrying on a general store, which was started by them in the year 1839, and has been in continuous operation ever since by the original founders and their descendants. In the year 1825, Charles Allen, a native of Andover, Vermont, came to Waterloo to work as a blacksmith. A few years later he formed a partnership with Daniel Taylor, a native of Newfane, Vermont, to carry on the business of blacksmithing and cloth dressing. That partnership continued until 1858, when Mr. Taylor died. In 1861 a new partnership was formed, and a son of each of the former partners was admitted into the company. Charles Allen died in 1881, and his second son became a member of the company. This firm is still carrying on the business of machinists and dealers in general merchandise. D. L. Allen commenced working as clerk for Allen, Taylor & Co. in 1861, and was admitted a partner in 1881. The store is therefore 70 years of age. The front is the same as it always has been except in the lower storey larger panes of glass have been put in the windows.

Butter Advances at the Coast—High Flavor of British Columbia Apples Demonstrated—Prune Industry Growing—Next Convention of the Western Boards of Trade to be Held at Brandon.

VANCOUVER.

October 5.—Up goes the price of butter this week. Local is quoted now at 35c wholesale, retailing at 40c, which is 5c a pound increase. There is some eastern butter obtainable at 28c, but the price is practically 30c, while Northwest dairy butter is going at from 21 to 22½c wholesale. This is the upward winter trend, and it will be up higher than that, according to past records.

Local eggs are quoted at 48c, with a retail price of 55c, while select Ontarios go at 32c.

D. E. Gellatly, one of the large growers of tomatoes in the Okanagan, who has 50 acres under tomatoes, declares that the high price for this article is not due to the grower; on the contrary the consumer and the grower are the ones who pay. He is in the city for a few days, and in discussing this subject, while not apportioning the blame himself, would hint that it lies on the middleman. For some time past he has been shipping two carloads a day to the prairie and the coast. He regards 30 tons to the acre a fair crop, and this is what is obtaining this year. He differs with the Ottawa government in regarding tomatoes as a fruit, declaring it is a vegetable, in that it grows from seed the same year that it is set.

The Dominion Biscuit Co., Ltd., better known in British Columbia as Ramsay Bros. & Co., Ltd., have purchased the plant of the Regal Biscuit Company of Calgary, and will now have factories at Montreal, Calgary and Vancouver. The Calgary end of the business will be under the management of Wm. M. Ramsay, secretary and assistant manager of the Dominion Biscuit Co., and he will leave Vancouver with his family in a few days to reside in Calgary. Associated with the company are several of the leading and well-known business men of Calgary.

The price of milk for the winter has been definitely fixed at 22½c per gallon, being an increase of 2c per gallon, and $1.30 for cream, or an advance of 20c. It has also been decided to organize a system of bi-monthly settlements between the wholesaler and retailer owing to large losses in the past by failure of a number of retailers in Vancouver.

By the destruction by fire of its three-storey plant at Victoria, the M. R. Smith & Company lost about $30,000. The Insurance is quoted in the neighborhood of $25,000. This company was lately reorganized, and it is thought that if it rebuilds it will be in Vancouver.

It has often been stated that the flavor of Ontario apples was superior to that of British Columbia fruit, but when W. E. Scott was at Toronto, where the province had an exhibit at the Fair, he demonstrated to Ontario fruitgrowers that the flavor compares very favorably. Mr. Scott, who is back after looking after the display, states that when a number of fruitgrowers were viewing the display, the only criticism offered was that the flavor was not as good as that of the Ontario apples. He selected apples from each province and tested several of the visitors as to their knowledge of the flavor of apples, and as a result they had to admit that the apples from British Columbia had also the better flavor. Mr. Scott reports that the exhibit created quite a sensation, and although it was early in the season, a fine showing was made. Despite the fact that the exhibit had to travel 2,500 miles, it was in good condition for the two weeks of the Fair, and was afterwards repacked and sent to Ottawa.

Twenty men were employed last week in picking prunes in Honsberger's orchard at Grand Forks, B.C. Apart from this special feature, there is a particular point in that fruit in this quantity is now being grown in the Boundary district of the province, which has all along been noted for its mining rather than its horticulture. Eight cars were loaded last week, 900 boxes to the car, and as the price is $1 per box wholesale, the grower nets a neat amount. Moreover, the trees are not yet near full maturity, so that larger results may be obtained in the future.

WINNIPEG.

Oct. 5.—The Georgeson Wholesale Grocery Co., of Calgary, which recently secured property in Brandon, on which a branch will be built, may also open a wholesale house in Winnipeg about the first of the year.

Codville & Co., wholesale grocers, are having plans prepared in Winnipeg for a new wholesale house to be built in Brandon on the site of the old building destroyed by fire last year. They are doing business now in leased premises.

June 14, 15 and 16 were the dates set for the annual convention of the Western Associated Boards of Trade for 1910, at a meeting of the Brandon board, held a few days ago. At the last convention, which was held in Saskatoon, it was decided that Brandon would be the next place of meeting.

Alex Dickson, late of the Hudson Bay store of this city, has recently been engaged as salesman in the A. R. Christie store on Portage Avenue. Previous to his accepting the engagement, Mr. Dickson spent a few weeks holidaying in the harvest fields of Manitoba, and returned to the city with a stronger muscle and a steadier nerve.

Thomas Reynolds, of the Quaker Oats Co., Peterboro, Ont., arrived in the city recently on a business trip to the west. He is at present viewing the local territory in company with W. H. Escott the local representative.

A. B. Christie is spending a few days recreation on the prairie this week, shooting ducks. He strongly recommends this kind of recreation, as it rests the body and mind, and at the same time invigorates.

Mr. McNaughton, of the McNaughton Fruit Co., has been exceedingly busy during the past few weeks on this fruit auction market. From three to five cars of fruit, mostly grapes, have been sold every morning for the past week upon their arrival in the city from Ontario. Mr. McNaughton wields the hammer.

Kingston Grocer Makes Big Mistake—Fruit Season Nearing a Close at Guelph.

GUELPH.

October 6.—Poultry is getting more active on the market in Guelph now. There is more coming in and there is a bigger demand than at any time previously this season.

Trade in peaches, tomatoes, and grapes has been lively during the past week, although the fruit season is about over, as far as Guelph's grocers are concerned.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Trade James Gow made a strong plea for the building of a line of the street railway down Ontario street, through St. Patrick's ward. Mr. Gow has ever been a champion of this cause and on the Board of Education, as well as on the Board of Trade, looks after the interests of St. Patrick's Ward people first, last, and always. It is an evidence of Mr. Gow's broadmindedness that although a street railway connecting his ward with the rest of the city might possibly have a tendency to take trade up town he does not, apparently, consider, or at least fear, the danger of losing any of his many good customers in that part of the city

PETERBORO.

October 6.—The grocers have been dealing heavily in the fruit that is now in season. Peaches, pears and plums have been handled in large quantities and the express companies receive hundreds of baskets every week.

W. C. Tully has opened up a grocery store in the new building at the corner of George and Sherbrooke Streets. It is in a good location and should meet with success.

KINGSTON.

October 6.—J. Gage, clerk in H. D. Bibby's clothing establishment and at one time grocery clerk in James Kelley's store, has purchased the stock and goodwill of Malcolm Corkey's, Montreal St. He is an industrious young man and should get his share of the trade.

Kirk & Lee, grocers and dairymen, sent 40 quarts of table cream to the penitentiary at Portsmouth, in mistake for skimmed milk the other day. When they found the mistake, the driver hastened back to the institution, but alas, it was nearly all consumed—not by convicts, however. No, even the bankers from the west were prohibited. Kirk & Lee will charge it up as cream and the government will pay for it; but they can afford to.

Heavy Rains Destroyed Potato Crop—St. John Market Shows Decline in Canadian Plate Beef.

ST. JOHN.

October 6.—The recent heavy rains have done considerable damage to the potato crop. The farmers were advised to leave them in the ground until thoroughly matured, as they would better withstand the ravages of rot. The deluge has now indefinitely postponed digging, while rot will increase by reason of the dampness. The shippers steadfastly refuse all but the perfect hand-sorted goods.

The trade has become suddenly quiet. For the past week orders have been small and few, and wholesalers have had an opportunity to fill their futures, where the goods were in stock. It is not surprising that there is a little dullness at this particular time, for merchants have been ordering heavily for the past three months, for the great harvest rush, and they have all found themselves well stocked when the change in season came. It will be only a matter of a few weeks before things will assume a more brisk aspect, since merchants will soon find their stock depleting, and orders for immediate shipments will again commence.

What the wholesalers have been losing in trade they have been gaining in cash collections. Money at present is just pouring in from every section of the country. In other years when cash came in at all it was usually in fifty and one hundred dollar lots; this week it is coming in by the thousand dollar lots.

This year is a record-breaker in the grocery business of the west in points of both trade and collections, and there is nothing in view to mar the present optimism of the general trade.

The markets are firmer and much firmer this week. Several lines have advanced, and we expect to quote other advances next week.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUIT—We quote a considerable rise in Valencia raisin prices this week. Prunes are very firm also, owing to short crops in sizes 50's to 80's, and it is possible an advance of about 1c will be made. Apricot prices are stiff.

Not only does the HUBER SYSTEM save you time by doing away with book-keeping and posting, but it avoids all errors and disputes with customers, and assists you materially in the collection of accounts. Efficient fire protection is also afforded you, as the Huber Register takes up little room in any safe. Modern railroading is as much in advance of bullock-waggon travelling as the HUBER SYSTEM is superior to any other method of keeping accounts. We want to tell you all about it. Send a postal for our booklet. Made in Canada.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Lower Market for Bacon in England — Hog Prices Lower in Canada—Impression Austrailian Butter is Making on the English Trade—Downward Tone to Cheese Market.

For some reason the bacon market in England is lower, and although Canadian products are very nearly all consumed here, still the market here responds to any change over there. This week hogs are fully $1 per 100 lbs. lower. This is not altogether attributed to the lower prices in England, but more directly to the season of the year. Cured meats are to some extent at least, crowded out by poultry, fish and other fresh meats, which reduces the demand. As the stocks are very low this gives the packers a chance to replenish and get some surplus on hand.

With the whole world bidding for the English butter market, it is beyond any reliable calculation to figure out how or which way the markets will move. It is quite within the memory of the older dealers, when Australia and New Zealand, now very strong competitors, were not recognized as such, and Canada could always count on a share of England's winter supply. But now these countries send in their spring-made butter, and very much interfere with the northern hemisphere butter producing countries. The best value on the English market to-day seems to be the Siberian butter, and if the southern countries will send in their new season's make, Canadian butter which is waiting for a market might meet with disappointment.

The cheese market looks downward. The receipts of cheese in England are largely in excess of last year, and therefore the chances for a raise are at least not in sight.

TORONTO.

PROVISIONS—Owing to the time of the year, when more poultry, fish and other fresh meats are used, the demand for cured meats naturally falls off. This gives the packers a chance to replenish their stocks, which are unusually low. To do this, however, they cannot afford to pay the high notch prices for hogs, and in consequence prices have dropped a full dollar per 100 lbs. There is, however, no change in the prices of meats this week.

POULTRY—Nothing seems to be more plentiful around the commission houses than poultry, which is nearly all shipped alive. This is dressed by men who know how to do it, and any that is not required for immediate use goes into cold storage. There is still one thing overlooked or not understood by farmers, and that is that they are not properly finished for the market. It costs a lot to make the frame of a chicken, which, however, is worthless without the meat that belongs to it. The profit in raising chickens for the market depends entirely on how much meat is on this costly frame, and that should be put on by good feeding a few weeks before they are sold.

WHERE PLUMS DISAPPEAR TO.

Story of the Journey of a Basket From Burlington to Muskoka—Early Saturday Night Delivery.

I have been considerably impressed lately with a campaign carried on by an Ontario paper under the heading of "The Size of the Loaf," the inference of course being that the loaves have got very small. But I have been more impressed by what has come under my personal observation as to "The size of a Basket of Fruit," when it reaches its destination. Start a good full basket of plums from Burlington for example. On the way up to Bracebridge you may not be surprised if the netting gets torn accidentally (?)

and equally by accident a few plums get out. You would think when the baskets reach the store of a merchant in Bracebridge they would not need any netting, but hardly. Just watch the Jack Horners that infest the stores and put in their thumbs and pull out plums. By and by some person from Lake Joseph buys a basket of plums and away they go on the boat. They change boats at, say, Port Carling. Some of the plums change hands too, for while they wait on the wharf more Jack Horners hover around. Having run the gauntlet from Burlington to Port Cockburn the remaining plums at last reach their destination and is it any wonder that the purchaser, looking at her purchase wonders and wonders at the "Size of a Basket of Fruit." This is no exaggeration, but the outline of a fact, pretty nearly a regrettable fact.

A few weeks ago I said something about Saturday night delivery. A merchant informs me that he believes it could be cut out entirely without doing anybody harm. People on the street say the same thing. The clerks are sure and the delivery men are cock sure that it is unnecessary to deliver till nearly Sunday morning every Saturday night. No doubt if the merchants adopt the no delivery idea we would all fall into line, but if we would starve them into it by doing our Saturday shopping earlier or carry our own goods home they could quit easier because they would be glad to quit. All it needs is some one to start to quit and the other side will soon follow the lead. This and the question of earlier closing are two things that deserve earnest consideration and while it may take some time to bring both to pass it should be fairly easy to put them into operation one at a time. Either one would be ever so much easier and worth ever so much more to the community than the Discovery of the North Pole.—Bracebridge Gazette.

A. G. Snowdon, of Snowdon & Ebbitt, has returned to Montreal, from New York, where he was on business.

The St. Croix Soap Manufacturing Co., St. Stephen, N.B., has purchased more property on which to erect a large addition to their factory. Ganong Bros., chocolate manufacturers, in St. Stephen, are also preparing to build an extension.

Two hundred and twenty new elevators were constructed in the Canadian west during the present building season. This gave the prairie provinces a total of 1,700 elevators over lines of the several railways. A western newspaper man, who is fond of figures, estimates that it would require a train 550 miles long to carry out this season's crop. If broken up into separate trains it would mean 2,425 trains of thirty-five cars each.

Wholesalers and Brokers Already at Bowling

They Organize in Winnipeg and Have Arranged a Schedule of Games—Some Features About the Merits of the Leaders—Rumors of Tempting Offers Floating Around.

Winnipeg, Oct. 5.—The Winnipeg Wholesale Grocers and Brokers have recently organized a bowling league, and a schedule has been framed for the winter months. At the meeting held a few evenings ago a large number of enthusiasts were present, and officers for the year were elected. D. Harmer of the Codville Co., was elected president, D. McLay of Nicholson & Bain, vice-president, and George J. Cameron, of W. L. Mackenzie Co., was the unanimous choice for the arduous duties of secretary-treasurer.

The spirit which prevails among the members is excellent, and the purpose of the organization is to foster feelings of good-will and become as well acquainted in a social way as they are in business.

Two matches have already been played off in the Royal alley, and if the same spirit prevails that was in evidence on those two occasions, the league will be a paramount success, and everyone will look forward for lots of fun.

The first game was played on September 28, when the Brokers No. 1 defeated the team from Campbell Bros. & Wilson. On the following evening the Jobbin-Marrin team defeated the Foley Bros. & Larson team. Each team worked hard, having their visionary eye on a handsome cup, which is not yet donated, but which is expected to appear very soon.

The players were not all amateurs, nor were they all professionals. When the individual prizes come to be handed out, it is possible that Paul Johnston of Campbell Bros. & Wilson will land a handsome trophy. He can teach the boys how to hit the pins all right. George Cameron knows the game, and it may be that he will retire from business to organize a professional team. No one knows where he got his training, but he is certainly skilled in the art of handling a team. The fact that John Cheyne has had an offer to join a championship quartette in Philadelphia, has rather startled some of his opponents, but he cannot be barred from playing since as yet he has not broken away. At any rate it is rumored that Mr. Cheyne has not succeeded in getting them to "come over."

Ryan Bros. are very noisy on the alley floor and an attempt may be made to oust them from the league if better behavior is not shown. At a recent meeting of the executive it was decided to bar the teams entered by McNally, on account of professional reasons. Mr. McNally's companions are not well pleased with the shrewd manner in which he endeavored to enter his picked ones. Oswald Marrin is all smiles in anticipation of the cup coming his way. However, Oswald has yet to see a few dark horses among the rest.

The following wholesale houses each have a team in the league: Fol Bros. & Larson, Jobbin-Marrin Co Codville Co., and Campbell Bros. Wilson. There are two teams from t brokers' association.

SALMON SEASON FINISH.

Vancouver, Oct. 4.—An estimate the salmon pack, since the resumptio of the fishing, after the close seaso from August 25th to September 15t gives 70,000 cases at the outside. Thi added to the 420,000 cases packed b fore August 25th, will give the appro imate pack for the season on the Frase river at 490,000 or in round numbe 500,000 cases. The catch since the 15t has been better than anticipated though not particularly large, as man as sixty fish to the boat having bee caught. The price has varied, reachin as high as 17½ cents per fish, the aver age being about 15 cents. There hav not been so many cohoes as is the rul in the late season fishing, the propor tion of sockeyes being large.

The new Bill of Lading, which wa described at length in a recent issue o The Grocer, went into effect on Octobe 1st.

Why Tie Up Your Cash?

We want the Grocers of Canada to fully realize that Christie Fancy Biscuits —La Fete, Orange Wafers, Coffee Wafers, Philopenas, Dominoes, Acorns, et cetera, et cetera,—are far superior to any fancy lines manufactured on this continent, and equal in Purity, Nutriment and Quality to the highest grades manufactured in the British Isles. The point is this:—Why tie up your cash when you can buy fresh and pure and in small quantities when you want them? Remember—we're not saying one word against the high and unvarying standard of English fancy lines; but we do maintain, and reasonably, that Christie fancy lines are the equal of the best produced anywhere. As a practical Grocer you know that a sea voyage never adds anything to the flavor of food stuffs. The moral is plain. Stock Christie fancy biscuits when you want the best fancy lines with the right flavor. Don't tie up your cash!

N.B.---Our "Madeira Mixed" and "Cherry Rings" are superior fancy lines.

Reasons Why Wheat Prices Have Not Gone Down so Low as Was Expected—Many Sides to the Question—Speculative Interest is Great—Cereal Prices Dcline in Montreal.

During the high price of wheat, when good prospects of a new crop were in sight, flour dealers all tried to carry as little on hand as possible, expecting much lower prices as soon as the new wheat would come on the market. This resulted in a heavy demand for new wheat flour, and the farmers not anxious to rush their wheat on the market, forced millers to buy it at higher figures than they expected in order to get enough to fill their orders. Wheat, however, is piling up and with the enormous crop, not only in Canada, but all over the world, with few exceptions, the natural conclusion would be that wheat must come down. We must however, take into consideration the high prices of all other foods, and wheat and flour cannot drop much below the level of other food values.

Besides these natural features, there is also the speculative element, now so powerful, which may figure very materially in controlling the wheat and flour market. While the price of flour has not changed this week, wheat has varied almost from day to day. The reason of this cannot be accounted for, further than a fight between the bull and the bear.

FLOUR—There is no change in the price of flour this week, and the market is strong, yet as one miller expressed it, the funny part of it is that everything has a bearish feeling. Wheat is held firm, but in spite of the fluctuations the feeling is that it will settle a little lower.

PREFERENCE ON FLOUR.

West Indian Commission Hears Views of St. John Business Men.

St. John, N.B., October 4.—The Royal British West Indian trade commissioners, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, Sir John Poynder-Dickson-Poynder, Hon. Daniel Morris, Hon. W. S. Fielding and Hon. Wm. Patterson, was here last week. In the afternoon the commission held its first session in the Board or Trade rooms and heard the views of H. B. Schofield, Charles Peters, L. G. Crosby, J. Fraser Gregory and John Sealey as to the conditions and necessities of Canada's trade with the West Indies. Local business men were agreed on the necessity of an improved transportation service, but differed on other points.

It was fairly well brought out, however, that St. John exporters of dried fish or lumber do not fear any competition in the West Indian market and desire no preferential treatment. On Canadian flour a suitable preference would, it was believed, result in turning the whole British West Indian flour trade of 500 barrels per year toward Canada, and most of this would be handled through St. John. One matter which would materially aid Canadian trade was the establishment here of commission and storage warhouses, where general goods for the West Indian market could be kept in stock and orders could thus be filled without the delays incident upon the long railway haul.

The secret of success still lies in the same old word, "drudgery." For drudgery is the doing of one thing, one thing, one thing, long after it ceases to be amusing; and it is this "one thing I do" that gathers me together from my chaos, that concentrates me from possibilities to powers. That whole long string of habits,—attention, method, patience, self-control, and the others,—can be summed up in the word, "concentration."—W. C. Gannett.

VALUE OF SUGAR AND HONEY.

As Producers of Muscular Energy They are Among the Best Foods.

There is a well-nigh universal opinion, says the Federal Reporter, that such foods as sugar and honey are almost valueless as producers of muscular energy. But read what the highest medical authority in the world, the London Lancet, has to say on the subject.

Sugar is one of the most powerful foods which we possess, as it is the cheapest, or, at any rate, one of the cheapest. In muscular labor no food appears to be able to give the same powers of endurance as sugar; and comparative practical experiments have shown without the least doubt that the hard physical worker, the athlete, or the soldier on the march, is much more equal to the physical strain placed upon him when he has had included in his diet a liberal allowance of sugar than when sugar is denied him.

Trophies, prizes and cups have undoubtedly been won on a diet in which sugar was intentionally a notable constituent. It has even been said that sugar may decide a battle, and that jam after all is something more than a mere sweetmeat to the soldier. The fact that sugar is a powerful "muscle food" probably accounts for the disfavor into which it falls, for a comparatively small quantity amounts to an excess, and excess is always inimical to the easy working of the digestive processes.

Sugar satiates; it is a concentrated food. Where sugar does harm, therefore, it is invariably due to excess. Taken in small quantities and distributed over the daily food intakes, sugar contributes most usefully in health to the supply of energy required by the body. And it is a curious fact that the man who practically abstains from sugar, or reduces his diet to one almost free from carbohydrates in favor of protein foods such as meat, often shows feeble muscular energy and an indifferent capacity for physical endurance.

CHANGE DISPLAYS WEEKLY.

Change your window displays at least weekly and decorate them in the most tempting manner you know how—such as would have a tendency, if it is a grocer display, to create a desire on the part of the housewife to buy some of the palatable food products shown for her home.

From an artistic point of view, color harmony plays an important part, and in arranging displays the trimmer must depend upon his own artistic taste.

One of the most important features of a window is its illumination. Experience has taught me that it is advisable to cut out all elaborate lighting, such as was used a few years ago, and in its place use some of the newer lighting methods, of which the most popular seems to be the reflector scheme.

How About Raising Your Stock of Goodwill

Once, Brother Grocer, for certain reasons which we shant divulge, a large department store needed Half a Million in Cash.

To Discount its Bills.

The Loan was obtained from a single bank, simply upon a Promissory Note.

And the Bank President gives some of his reasons for so readily advancing the Coin:

"A sure and staple market existed for their goods."

"The store had gone ahead, not backward."

"It had kept faith with its customers, building up Good-will at the same time it built up its sales."

"It had put tremendous energy into selling, but never had sold under false pretences."

Such, Brother Grocer, is the Force of Good-will—the By-product of your Daily Business.

How would YOU measure under this standard?

Say, in the matter of your Flour Sales.

Would YOU get the loan?

There is a "Sure and Staple market" for FIVE ROSES flour.

Add FIVE ROSES quality to your Sales Force—then Go Ahead.

For it "Puts Tremendous Energy into Selling—never sells under False Pretences."

The FIVE ROSES sales start a Steady Flow of Permanent Profits into your Cash Balance.

And Cash in the Bank, you know, does not become shop-worn; it does not deteriorate nor depreciate.

Increase your Stock of Goodwill, Brother Grocer, against the time you may need it.

Some day it will become Cashable—when you might want to Sell Out, or Borrow on your Reputation.

For Goodwill is the only stock we know of that appreciates in Value as it increases in Age and Volume—is it not so?

FIVE ROSES is carefully packed in Genuine Flour Satisfaction ere leaving the Pure-Food mills at Keewatin. Thus it captures the Confidence of the Good Trade.

Which Consistent Quality retains.

And the man who has a Grip on the Confidence of his Community almost literally carries that Trade in his Pocket—and it is his to have and to hold, until he Abuses it, Retires or Dies.

And FIVE ROSES quality has never Abused Confidence nor Retired before any Competition.

Can't YOU realize this Palpable Fact:

That when you sell Good Flour, under the FIVE ROSES label, it is an Asset to YOU—an Asset that appreciates in Value as your sales Increase?

You cannot depend on any other flour to the same extent—some have tried.

The Casual Customer becomes a Permanent Patron when fed on FIVE ROSES.

You will soon see that the surface in flour selling has not even been scratched in your vicinity.

And now you must decide whether you will sell FIVE ROSES and make Good Profits, or stand idly by while Competition collars the Benefits.

Good Profits plus New Business plus Reputation.

Think well on it, Brother Grocer, and remember that—

"To-day is the best day in the year."

Reasons for Objections to New Act in Manitoba

The Extra Provincial Corporations Act Being Strongly Opposed—Meeting Held and Oppisition Voiced—Business Men Claim It to be Unfair to Large Outside Manufacturers Doing Small Business in the Province.

Staff Correspondence.

Winnipeg, Oct. 5.—On the evening of October 1, the various committees representing the Brokers' Association, the Manufacturers' Association, Board of Trade and Grain Exchange, met for the purpose of converging into one argument the results of the various committees investigating in their respective departments regarding the opposition to the present reading of the Extra Provincial Corporations Act, which is to go into effect on November 1st next.

There was a large number of Winnipeg's most influential business men present, and H. P. Pennock, who has conducted the campaign against the Act, and who has been instrumental in arousing the present effective opposition, was asked to preside over the proceedings.

The secretaries of the various committees submitted their reports, which in almost every way were found to harmonize. After discussing the various points brought forward, a general committee was appointed to frame a resolution, which would embody all the arguments submitted, and this resolution is to be forwarded to the Cabinet with the request that the date of the enforcement of the Act be postponed until after the next session of Parliament.

Objections to the Act.

The four main clauses of the resolution will direct the attention of the Cabinet to the following grievances:—

1. Resident brokers and agents already pay a local and provincial business tax, and this should be sufficient, irrespective of the the firms they represent.

2. The extra provincial corporation fees are altogether unfairly proportioned, a firm with several millions capitalized stock and doing a comparatively small business within the province will be compelled to pay more than a firm whose capital stock is less, and whose business in the province may be vastly more.

3. It is unreasonable that any company be asked to submit their annual financial report to the Government, which may or may not become public property.

4. Brokers and commission men consider it unjust that they should be discriminated against in favor of travelers.

The act manifestly offers inducements to outside firms to dispense with resident brokers' services, which service will be put into the hands of traveling salesmen.

Local business men who are doing all in their power to oppose the increase are very anxious that outside firms and manufacturers, which are affected by the Act, should co-operate with them. It is understood that some steps have been taken by the Manufacturers' Association, and it would seem reasonable that the combined opposition of each party would be more effective than individual action. Manitoba business men are working for that which will greatly benefit manufacturers, and they think that in some way the outside firms should acknowledge their endeavors.

RESULTS OF TOBACCO EXPERIMENTS.

Harrow, Oct. 4.—The tobacco crop at the Government experimental station here is practically all harvested. Some varieties of cigar tobacco, including Comstock, Cuban and Hazelwood, are almost entirely cured. The color is good and the quality of leaf very fair. The final results of the fertilizer tests with improved Burley (plug) are not yet ready, but there were very marked differences in the crops as they stood in the fields. The potash and ammonia fertilizer appeared to produce the largest and heaviest leaf, while the complete fertilizer and manure plot was a very close second. The Burley crop will give a fair average yield.

Two kilns of tobacco have been cured, and were emptied and refilled. There are two more kilns being cured out, the whole process being completed in 2½ days. A trial test was made with a kiln of Burley and the prospects are quite encouraging, a very good color being obtained.

RUIN FOR ENGLISH OYSTERS.

A despatch from London, Eng., states that not for twenty-five years has the lot of the English oyster been as hard as this year. Its enemy the mussel has invaded the oyster beds in countless battalions.

The Burnham Oyster Fishery Co. is employing twenty smacks for the sole purpose of dredging up the mussels in the twenty-one miles of oyster beds in its possession. Hundreds of tons of wholly useless mussels have been dredged in the last few months, and it is only lately that any headway has been gained against the enemy. The mussels have no market value. In the Burnham beds there are some 140,000,000 oysters inhabiting different patches, according to their age.

FISH—With weather more suitable, the fish market is improving considerably. Pickled herrings and green cod are offering more freely from producing quarters. Labrador salmon and sea trout are rather scarce, though some have been bought for this market. In smoked and fresh fish, up to the present, the weather has been against sales, but the trade expects improvement from now on.

GREEN FRUITS—The fruit market shows a decided falling off this week. Many lines are showing signs of approaching the end of their seasons. The best peaches are over, and the receipts grow less from day to day. Plums are practically done. Pears are also dwindling away. Apples, however, are getting more plentiful, and are selling for $1.50 to $2.50 a barrel. Good keeping winter apples are not yet offered. Grapes are at their best, and are King in the market.

The late Valencia California oranges are still almost the only kind on the market, but the Floridas are expected in a few weeks. The exports of apples to England are very heavy. Last week 44,000 bbls. left Montreal and Halifax.

VEGETABLES—Potatoes are coming in freely and the market is dull. The crop is excellent, both in quantity and quality, pretty much all over Ontario. They are worth delivered on the track in car lots 55c per bag. Onions are making a big show, and lots are changing hands.

Cantaloupes are still occupying a prominent place in the market. Tomatoes cannot keep up the appearance they did a few weeks ago. Cucumbers are the scarcest vegetable in the market. Egg plants are grown more extensively from year to year.

LOBSTER CATCH DECREASING.

Newcastle, N.B., Oct. 4.—Commissioner Wakeham has completed the taking of evidence in the investigation of the lobster fisheries in Eastern Canada. The last place he visited was Charlotte County, N.B. He states that the evidence collected in Charlotte County, like that obtained in other parts of Canada, is very conflicting. One thing is true of all districts, however—the catch of lobsters is steadily falling off. This falling off is due to the catching of undersized lobsters, and to the destruction of berried lobsters. The only remedy, he intimates, is legislation increasing the size of the lobster which can be legally caught. The consensus of opinion in Charlotte Co. was in favor of a uniform size of ten and a half inches, and a uniform season on the border, with the establishment of a lobster hatchery.

Falls in With the Idea of Holding a Fruit Show

"Lover of Fruit" Thinks General Public Should Become Educated on Different Kinds of Fruit—Suggests Annual Show at Fruit Market When Retailers Shall be in Charge.

Editor Canadian Grocer, — The idea suggested by The Canadian Grocer in last week's issue, of holding a fruit show one day each year at the fruit market is a capital one. Few people have any idea of the immense quantities, the excellent qualities, and the endless varieties of fruit that come to our market and are handled each day, during the fruit season. Besides affording the people an opportunity of seeing the most inviting and attractive exhibition of the year, it could be made invaluable from an educational point of view. The difference in varieties could be printed and literature distributed with interesting information as to their food values, the names of the different varieties and kinds of fruit. Also information on preserving, could be given as well as the various methods of doing them up, and how to use them in different ways. We have at present several dozen varieties of peaches, and all that the masses of the people know are two kinds, the cling stones and the Crawfords. They all fight against the cling stone and for the Crawford. Nothing but a Crawford will do, and yet thousands of baskets are sold, which are not Crawfords, but are sold as such. Why all this ignorance? Why compel the retailer to sell them as Crawfords or else lose the sales? Ignorance is always a hindrance, and the more we can enlighten the people in the goods they buy, the easier it will be to do business with them.

The idea of the article I refer to is unique, but so feasable that it must at once commend itself to the fruit men. The day could be arranged several weeks ahead, and then on that day have special shipments, and the retail merchants prepared to take possession. It may be too late for this year, but it should certainly have due consideration before next year.

Friends—Not Growlers

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes never comes back to you with growls from the housekeeper. It is always made up to the same high standard maintained for forty years, and it is always just right. That's why we have the thousands upon thousands of grocers pushing it everywhere. Grocers don't wish to run the risk of losing a good customer by passing out an inferior stove polish, which is wrong more often than it is right. RISING SUN makes friends for you and for us in every household where you put it.

The absolute purity of Cox's Gelatine makes it a standard product of world-wide fame. Whether in powdered or shredded form, it is still as free from foreign substances as the clearest rock crystal from mother earth.

Cox's Gelatine

It has never disappointed, and never will, because folks get what they expect and want when they buy the peer of all—"Cox's." Highest quality to-day, to-morrow and all the to-morrows to come. A safe and certain asset for a grocer's stock - in - trade — always worth its face value of 100 cents on the dollar.

Codou's Macaroni, Vermicelli, Spaghetti, fancy letters and pastes, represent the top-notch of quality—the highest attainment of skill, experience and cleanliness in a model factory, said to be (by those who really know) one of the finest in the world.

Codou's Macaroni

A macaroni whose delicacy and whiteness bear witness to the caution used in selecting only finest wheat (from Taganrog) for the making. Tender as a macaroni can be, nutritious to the highest degree. Let the name on every package "Codou" serve to assure you of highest quality when you buy.

Telling the People!

We Are Putting Out a Good Article and Are Telling the People of Its Goodness.

THIS ANNOUNCEMENT is opportune. It comes with the launching of the largest advertising campaign we have ever undertaken. We are using large display advertising in practically every paper (363 papers in Ontario alone) from the Atlantic to the Pacific — trade-producing copy that means business — good active business.

It is a continuation of our progressive policy — of putting out a good article and then telling the people of its goodness. This is of inestimable value to you, because the call for "SALADA" is maintained — it means continuous and increasing business. The people buy "SALADA" and they continue to buy it because we guarantee and maintain the rigid standard of quality for which "SALADA" is famous. We have upheld our recognized reputation for serving the public well. Our enormous and steadily increasing sales reflect the confidence of every grocer and consumer in "SALADA" — the appreciation of both for honest, consistent service.

The Only Toffee

TOFFEE

Supplied to the Queen of England and Empress of Russia

Mackintosh Toffee, now one of Canada's Products, Manufactured at the Mackintosh Toffee Works, Brockville, Ont., by the

JOHN BULL CANDY CO.

This Toffee is essentially a Spring, Fall and Winter Sweetmeat; its properties, besides delightful flavor, consisting of the fats of Milk and Cream and Creamery Butter, all of which are guaranteed to be of the finest quality, thereby assuring to the consumer a sweetmeat giving heating and nourishing properties to the body.

W. GORDON STABLES, M.D.,C.M., says: "Toffee feeds the teeth by supplying the body with warmer, richer blood. What are we eating when we place Toffee in our mouths? The answer is: a composition of the best sugar, and fats of the most easily digested kind, namely, cream and butter, which are fuel food of the greatest value in the animal economy taken in the most pleasant of all formulas---Toffee." Let me say to all whom it may concern, and surely health concerns everyone, that I have analysed and tested the toffees produced by John Mackintosh, Ltd., that I have visited the works and critically examined everything with the manufacture of that toffee, and do unhesitatingly pronounce it the healthiest of all the sweetmeats that I have ever known.

It Will Double Your Cheese Trade, and Pay Back Its Cost Every Ninety Days

It costs but little and every grocer who has used a Perfection Computing Cheese Cutter will vouch for the statement above.

It is simply constructed, don't get out of repair.

It is simple to operate. Any 12 year old boy can set a cheese on the cutter and cut it up into slices of any given price.

You set the scale once for every cheese. Put the price per pound mark on one bar opposite the total weight mark on the other. Every time you raise the lever you measure off 5c. worth. Raise it any number of times desired and cut the cheese in one fresh, appetizing wedge.

We guarantee your exact profit on every cheese

Six years of trial has proved it to be an absolute necessity. Still it is the handsomest fixture a grocer can buy. Insist on getting a "Perfection" Cutter.

Jobbers all over the world sell it and back up our guarantee.

As regards our CHEWING GUM, the raw gum comes from Central America, where it arrives at a higher state of perfection than anywhere else. This gum is then purified and worked in our large, well-equipped factory, which is a model of cleanliness. We also manufacture Waxed Paper.

LIPTON'S TEA

When you realize that over 2,000,000 packages of Lipton's Tea are sold every week, your judgment will prompt the conclusion that it should be worth your while to recommend it to your customers.

You know other grocers are making money every day on Lipton's Tea, and it is fair to say that you are certainly losing money if you do not stock, display and recommend it.

It is without corners or seams to hold dust or dirt, and when emptied by the consumer can be scraped entirely clean without any trouble.

The slight curve outward on the edge of the dish makes it strong, and as it is sharp, it clears the material from the spade or ladle very easily.

Made of selected Canadian hardwood, they are entirely free from taint and are clean and sweet.

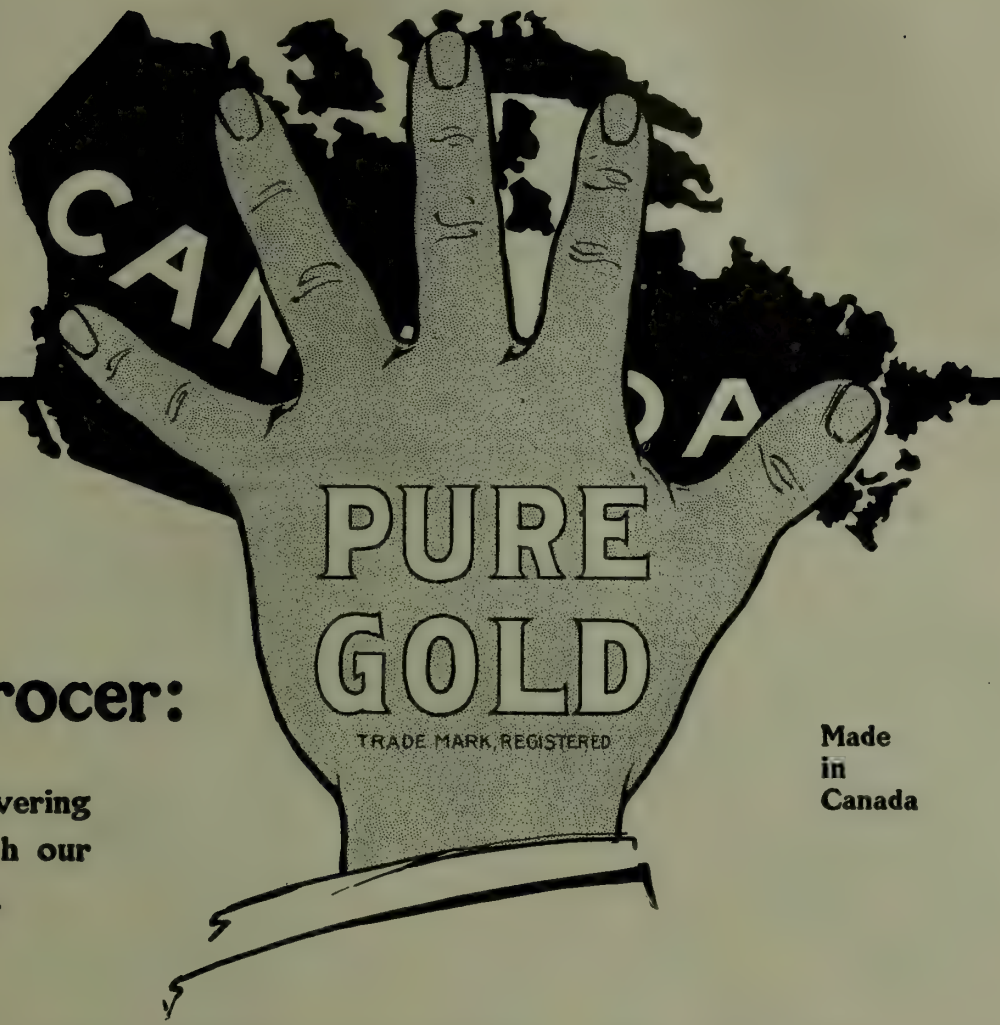
SUPERLATIVE QUALITY CONSISTENTLY MAINTAINED

Your especial attention is called to this year's pack of canned fruits. We are extremely proud of the quality of the canned fruit we are able to give you at any time, but we feel that our offerings this year are more than above the average. We think that you will be more than interested in samples of our special fancy peaches, delicious pears, tasty plums and other very salable fruits.

Our corn, too, we believe merits a little more than the usual attention. You know that we grow our corn—through farmers—in the neighborhood of St. Johns, Que., a very fertile and fine agricultural district, bordering on the United States. We supply these farmers, all of them, with selected seed, which we procure from the wonderful corn-growing regions in Maine—the magnificent corn country. In consequence our corn is not of the ordinary variety, but is creamy, white, delectable.

WE HAVE A REPUTATION WHICH WE ARE GOING TO KEEP UP

IF YOU ORDER IMMEDIATELY YOU WILL THE SOONER REAP THE BENEFIT OF IT



Both fruits and vegetables are packed in factories of the most sanitary description. We have all the very latest machinery, and no wrinkle is too new or too expensive for us to employ if it will enable us to turn out better goods. You know that this is in keeping with the policy we have always maintained.

Wanted—Miraculous Results

By A. B. LEVER

SOME people expect miracles from every dollar they invest in advertising.

If they buy a block of merchandise, a piece of land, stocks, or bonds, they are quite satisfied if they get in return a fairly good profit.

A miracle is something which they never expect from such investments.

But when it comes to investing in advertising it is a horse of another color.

Results to them are only satisfactory if they get back the original dollar invested as well as the dividends by the first mail.

Advertising does great things. All great modern businesses have been built up on advertising.

But there have been no miracles performed.

Good advertising produces good results.

Sometimes the results are apparent at once.

Sometimes the results, like bread cast upon the waters, are not seen until after many days. But they are sure to be seen eventually.

The character of the results depends a great deal upon the article advertised and the character of the copy.

Business men who expect miracles to be worked by every dollar they invest in advertising had better not essay to join the army of progressive business men.

They will be disappointed if they do.

As long as a dollar lasts they will at least have the satisfaction of feeling it in their pocket.

Only those should advertise who know that advertising is a straight business investment, productive of good results if judiciously done and properly attended to.

Great results from one brief venture in the advertising field are no more possible than a cultured man from one day's tuition.

Both are the results of gradual and persistent effort, not of miracles.

"Enterprise" Economy

An Enterprising grocer, who does things right, uses an "Enterprise" Electrically-Driven Coffee Mill.

The right way is also the cheapest way in the end. It always pays. Take the experience of the Philadelphia grocer who grinds 15,000 pounds of coffee a month with an "Enterprise" Mill electrically-driven at a cost for current of $3.00.

He bought the Mill as a great convenience—a time and labor saver, and an up-to-date attraction for his store. Its economy astonished him.

Look through our catalogue and you will find Mills of any capacity, any power required, for direct or alternating current. Your local power supply company will co-operate with advice and assistance.

The Mill illustrated here is No. 08712, fitted with ½ horse power motor for alternating current. Capacity of each iron hopper, 6 pounds of coffee. One Mill is fitted with grinders for granulating, the other for pulverizing. Granulates 2 pounds of coffee per minute, and can be regulated for fine or coarse grinding while mill is running. If you haven't the catalogue showing all our Mills, write for a copy to-day.

You Can Win a Larger Flour Trade With

PURITY FLOUR

Some grocers tell us Purity Flour is a little too expensive for their trade. But that's a mere delusion. Surely you wouldn't have us believe that your customers are too poor to pay the little difference in price between Purity Flour and flour of average quality ?

You can sell Purity Flour to nine women out of ten if you tell them the truth about Purity Flour. The truth is this :

Purity Flour is made exclusively of the high-grade constituents of the hard wheat berry — no low-grade constituents in it. In fact, it is so high in quality that many authorities say it is the "highest grade in the world." The little higher price of Purity Flour is greatly overbalanced by its extra quality.

After you've sold the housewives their first bag or barrel of Purity Flour you can rest assured they will bring you their repeat orders. Purity makes fast friends with home bakers who want the lightest, whitest, finest-flavored bread. After proving its quality once, they will never go back to average flour again. Instead, they will become so enthusiastic over Purity Flour that they will not be able to keep the good news a secret. They will advise their friends to use Purity, which means a larger flour trade for you.

If you are after that larger flour trade get in touch with us. The sooner the better for YOU.

Mr. Level-Headed Grocer

Which will YOU do, hold the credit customer AND GET YOUR MONEY OUT OF HIM? Or lose both the customer and the money he owes you? The answer ought to be simple. There is ONE WAY to hold this class of customers, please them, and avoid loss. That way is by using the

Allison COUPON BOOK SYSTEM

A man wants credit. You think he is good. Give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book. Have him sign the receipt or note form in the front of the book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10 — No trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10 and gets another book. No pass books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

The above cut shows what can be accomplished in Show-card Writing With a Little Practice. This and the Accompanying Cards are all the work of J. L. Wyckoff. The Original Card is 22x14 inches.

Publicity that can be Supplied via the Show Card

What its Purpose is and Reasons Why it Should be Utilized—The Kind of Card to use and Advice on Best Methods of Writing it—Avoid Comic Cards, but Cultivate Art of Preparing the Novel Variety—Never Show Dirty Card-board.

By J. L. Wyckoff, Manager T. A. Rowat & Co.'s Branch Store, London.

The purpose of the show card is to announce or call attention to the goods on display, or it may be classed as a salesman, but not a "silent salesman" as some people may think. A good show card will "speak its piece," and speak it well. Every word and line is, or should be, so full of life that the moment people read it a desire to examine or purchase the goods is at once created.

In order to produce this kind of card, it is necessary to pay particular attention to the spacing of the words and letters. The arrangement or layout of the card should be neat and artistic, as well as legible; with the most important words in the inscription, brought out conspicuously, and a liberal margin around the card. With the letters well drawn, the writer will have a card that will promote the interests of the goods when placed in a prominent position in the window display.

For a permanent card, the writer recommends a dark card lettered in white and particularly the color called carbon black. This board is about fourteen ply in thickness, and can be bought from dealers in photo supplies. The cost is a trifle higher than ordinary cardboard, but when it is considered that the cards are to be in use continually the year round, or for special seasons, the cost, after all, is very little. Pictures cut out and pasted on these cards will make them doubly attractive, particularly if the picture be appropriate to the inscription.

Care must be taken to have the picture perfectly straight and to see that no paste shows around the edges. If this is done properly it is almost impossible at a short distance, to detect the fact that the card has been so treated. Some pictures may require a little touching up, and here the cardprinter may bring his artistic ability into play.

The pictures can be secured from different sources—covers of magazines, advertisements, etc. When the writer sees a design that specially appeals to him he should file it away; he can never tell just when it may be useful.

Colored Card Desirable.

Many card writers do not believe in the use of colors, and pictures on cards. They claim that the only correct card is the white card lettered in black. This style may be all right for some purposes, but not for all. An illustration appropriate to the wording or a little color used judiciously will give life and snap to a card that the plainer ones do not have. For example, take an ordinary price ticket, letter the text in blue or black, on a white card and paint the figures and underline the words in a bright red; this combination of colors will make a very attractive card.

There are cards that should be avoided, such as the so-called "funny" or "comic" type. These may be all right for a comic newspaper but, for show cards, are entirely out of place. People may read them, and perhaps smile, but will pass on. This kind of a card, in the writer's opinion, will not sell goods, and should be condemned, where dignity should enter into effect.

Catch Phrases are Good.

Then, there are the novelty or catch phrase cards that could be used occasionally and would draw a good deal of attention.

Here are a few suggestions that could be used to advantage. Fasten a small Teddy bear to one corner of a card and have the inscription something like this: "Bear in mind we sell the best coffee in the city"—or a screw with this inscription "A good many turns in this business have taught us how to serve you."

For a cut price sale attach a small hatchet and the card should read like this: "Prices chopped in half." A novelty window could be arranged by taking an ordinary pick, drive it into a block of wood and place in the centre of the show window. Then arrange around picnic or other seasonable goods. Place a card near the pick which reads, "Pick out your picnic eatables." This window will draw a good deal of attention and especially if the pick is placed in a prominent position. People will stop to see what the pick means; their eyes will catch the card and then they look over the articles displayed. This usually means a sale of one or more articles.

And now, last but not least, keep your cards clean; a dirty card is almost as bad as no card at all.

If you are owing money to the bank, have your plans arranged so that you can realise on your assets quickly.

The good general always plans his campaign to be ready for attack that may come through unexpected sources. The good financier is always ready for an attack on his finances.

The concerns from whom one buys may be prosperous. The bank with whom one deals may be flourishing, and yet without warning something happens and you are suddenly called upon to liquidate your indebtedness. You should be prepared for this sudden call.

Practical Suggestions for Increasing Trade

The Merchant Should be Careful to Stock What Customers Call For—Carry Goods That Will Hold Custom—When New Goods Arrive Advertise Them—The Policy of Having a 'Leader.'

By Geo. F. Janes.

"How can I legitimately increase my business?" This is the vital question, which every grocer is undoubtedly asking himself from time to time. Like all others engaged in the mercantile business the grocers are after the nimble dollar, and any suggestions that will fatten their profits are worthy of consideration. Many plans, no doubt, suggest themselves for increasing their patronage, but many things have to be considered before they are adopted.

In the first place the grocer has to ask himself, are they the kind that will win the confidence of the public. The successful merchant cannot afford to trifle with anything that bears any resemblance to "fake" methods. He must be sincere and conscientious in endeavoring to bring a greater volume of trade to his door and his enthusiasm must be in the channel of honesty. There is no better way to gain business than by legitimate advertising, but the advertiser must back up his advertisements with honest goods. If there is anything like trickery, and he is detected, it is soon known far and near, because no one can talk louder and more frequently than a dissatisfied customer, and there is no telling what the result will be.

Carry a Complete Stock.

However, to get down to the basis of the argument as to how business can be increased. The starting point is unquestionably with a complete stock.

There are, of course, many things which would not pay a grocer to keep on his shelves, but if his stock embraces all the articles for which there is a good every-day demand, and they are well displayed and tidy in appearance, he has, at least from the standpoint of the average consumer, started out well.

The merchant who is indifferent about the completeness of his stock cannot hope to work up a very large trade for the very reason that he is not in a position to supply many of the articles for which he is asked, and in time people begin to say "you will not be able to get at ——— ———, you had better go to ———." The result is very apparent. Many who would have been customers of this particular grocer, all things being equal, are compelled to deal where they know their wants can usually be filled.

A Good Suggestion for Thanksgiving Time. Original Card is 22x14 Inches.

(See pages 78 and 79).

Stock New Goods.

But the point as to increasing business can be illustrated in another forcible way. There is always room for enterprise. Even the grocer who is proud of the fact that his stock is large, well-kept and attractive, can occasionally "do things" that will make a showing in the cash receipts. The successful grocers, those who have the largest trade, are doing it every day. They are always to the front "with just received a large shipment"—well it may be maple syrup in the early spring, or it may be butter or something else, but what ever it is they have a good supply when the other merchants have little or none. Of course, this is where the value of advertising comes in. They must let the public know of their enterprise, and then they await results.

It may be that whatever their particular shipment consisted of there were many aside from their regular customers, who became interested. They call at the store for the article in question, and naturaly enough leave their order for the day, and possibly for the week.

Policy of a 'Leader.'

In regard to building up trade, the policy of having a leader, something that is offered each week or each day at a special price, is undoubtedly a good plan with the merchant who gives systematic attention to advertising. If the advertisements are "talkative" people soon note the little bargains from day to day, and while there is probably no price cutting to speak of, they are interested, and the object of the merchant has been attained. All he can hope to do through his advertisements is to get the people to his store and it then depends upon himself and his staff to so treat them as to make them return.

One order invariably means another and as the persons who drop in to pick up a bargain will usually buy more than was originally intended, his plan of offering "snaps" each week is being very successfully followed by many stores. A particular one I have in mind is always well stocked, the "ads." each day are timely and well written and their results are very satisfactory.

Grocers who have not tried this and the other plans mentioned should give the matter serious thought.

Late Deliveries a Drawback to the Driver's Life

Other Difficulties With Which He Has to Contend—Employers Can Aid in Lightening His Burden by Educating Customers—Story of a Trip Around a Circuit With a Delivery Man.

By W. M. Ford.

The "groceryman" is always an object of awe and delight to the childish mind. It is not the man who owns the grocery store, I mean, mind you, but the delivery man—all the children know him as the "groceryman."

It is this "groceryman" who brings the groceries to the home and also the candies. Besides he drives a horse, and that in itself is a heighth of attainment to the undeveloped boyish mind.

A lot depends upon this same deliveryman, too, in every town or small city. He acts as general scapegoat for the firm and upon his head descend the anathemas of the housewife when the foodstuffs come too late for dinner or supper. Night and day, rain and shine, winter and summer, these men pursue their occupations regardless of weather. Theirs is no easy or lazy life !

For all that, as a type the men who deliver groceries are a jolly, good-natured bunch, with light hearts and ready wits.

The other Saturday night I was permitted to ride on the seat with one of these drivers, a typical deliveryman, and for upwards of an hour I was entertained by his novel, if erratic, conversation and his curious trend of thought. His constant touch with every portion of the town ennabled him to know most of the doings, but he was no gossip. Private affairs had no place in his conversation.

It had rained the previous day and the roads were, to say the least of them, abominable. In one place the wheels of the light wagon ground through gritty gravel, next they sank well-nigh axle deep and with a soft flop into a mud hole, and again the wagon would perform a series of manoeuvres, much like a bucking broncho, over a series of humps and hollows. It was very difficult for me to retain my seat and I was in constant fear of being hurled head-long to the ground, but to my companion it was no trouble and his body swayed easily with every motion of the wagon.

"This is where you need your 'sea legs' " he commented with a grin as I grabbed futilely for the reins, being in danger of falling off and seeing nothing else to reach for.

A Driver's Difficulties.

A brief stop was made while a parcel was being delivered. The house was a few steps up a side street and I waited while he ran up with his basket.

"Get great trainin' for a marathon on this job" he observed.

I agreed with a nod.

"Yes, and you see lots of scenery, too," he went on.

The horse, a stout nag with a persistent jog, stumbled. Its driver heaped maledictions upon its head, explaining meanwhile, in a half apologetic tone, that, "he ain't no good at skating."

We drove into a backyard and I watched him look carefully around. "Scared?" I suggested, for it was one of those backyards surrounded by high buildings and as dark as Erebus.

"Naw !" he replied, "But there's a lot of clotheslines hanging around here loose and a fellow can get a bad jolt if they catch you under the chin. I tear them down every time," he chuckled maliciously.

The next residence was that of a well-to-do citizen and if that worthy ratepayer had heard his reputation and pedigree from Mr. Driver's lips, as I did, he would not have an exalted opinion of himself. He had ordered the goods for Sunday, at ten o'clock on Saturday night, when he might just as conveniently have sent in his order many hours earlier. I meekly and silently concurred with all the driver said about this member of the community when I had heard all. That a man who works a few hours daily and has abundance of spare time should put off the ordering of a few groceries until such a time that it adds to the long hours and burden of the driver seems incomprehensible, and the only excuse is carelessness.

The deliverymen are not as a class very careful of their language. To call a spade a spade they say it in a round about way. Perhaps they have many provocations—who has not in any walk of life—but this particular driver cursed roundly at anything which incurred his vacillating displeasure. For instance : he carried a heavily laden basket into a house and, as is the general custom with deliverymen, walked around to the side door and rung the bell. No answer. A second and third ring met with the same result and then the 'swear words' were forthcoming. The door opened during a pause in which the driver was catching his breath and the mistress of the house appeared.

"Oh, I'm sorry I kept you waiting," she said very softly, "but I was busy. I heard you talking, though, and hurried as fast as I could."

He mumbled something unintelligible to me and then turned as fast as he possibly could, without as much as 'Good. night,' and walked rapidly to where the rig was standing. I was doubled up, with laughing—I could not help it. "Heard him," she had said and I shoved my glove into my mouth and nearly dislocated my neck in a vain effort to keep from bursting in uproarious, though perhaps unseemly, laughter. "Heard him !" Gracious goodness what would she think ! His face bore a half-comical half-annoyed expression when my friend the driver, climbed up beside me and he eyed me quizzically.

"Ah, cheese it, chummy, what's all the joke about ?" he said with a belligerent look in his eyes. Discretion seemed to me the wisest thing just then and I straightened my face up as best I could. However, the incident did not appeal to me as much of a joke a few minutes later and I think it cured him to some extent of giving vent to his feelings under such circumstances at any event.

Make His Burden Lighter.

To relate the occurrences of that trip which lasted until midnight when I bade good-night to my acquaintance of the evening might perhaps be wearisome to many. To me it was most instructive, and afterwards I have always felt a fellow feeling for these drivers of grocery delivery wagons because I know some of their troubles. If others would endeavor to see a little of the inside of the routine of their lives perhaps they would do more to make the deliveryman's load lighter. There are many ways it can be done. Perhaps the most simple is to educate customers to order the family supply of groceries early, have them leave the proper address, being very particular as to the number of the house and the street, see that they do not order something else that may have been forgotten, when the man comes around with the groceries, and so forth. A kind word with a cheerful smile, too, will brighten the lives of these true servants of mankind.

BUSINESS LOGIC.

Slipshod men make slipshod methods, and slipshod methods make slipshod men. Unless your methods are right you cannot expect your men to remain right.

The human machine has not yet, and never will, reach absolute perfection. The result of this is mistakes. Your clerks make them, and you have made plenty of them yourself. Make some allowances for occasional errors.

What would it be worth to you to have the reputation of being the most accommodating merchant in town? Wouldn't it bring you the trade of about every woman who buys things in your line?

The Mail Order House an Unnecessary Institution

Depressing Effect Catalogue Stores Have on Communities From Which They Draw Custom—Remedy Simply Becomes a Matter of Education—Retail Stores Needed for the Conveniences They Provide—Duty of Merchants is to Boom Their Own Business.

By M. Moyer.

It may be a bold statement to make, but I take the firm stand that the large mail order houses are a hindrance to the proper development of the country, a decided injury to the best interests of the people; that the retail stores in cities, towns and villages are the most economical and only complete system that can give satisfactory service to the people and are therefore absolute necessities for their comfort and convenience, and must be protected from unfair encroachments.

The mail-order houses have had a trial now for a number of years under very favorable circumstances and if they have proved themselves capable of giving the people all over the country better service than they get through the retail stores, then they are entitled to the trade. But in this they have entirely failed. The people have learned that, at best, they can only give them partial service and that they must depend on the retail stores for full service. If then they cannot give them complete service, and are only taking the best out of the retailer's business, why then should the people from hundreds of beautiful villages and towns send their millions to these concerns and thereby cripple and weaken the stores in their own towns on which they must depend for their needs. Is it reasonable to suppose that they would, if they understood the situation? Are they not deceived through incessant advertising on the part of these large stores; they are wrongly educated and unconsciously losing sight of their own interests?

Look at many of our towns and villages which were once prosperous, now with empty stores, dilapidated buildings, and ruined storekeepers and you will find out upon investigation that the people were misled through deceitful representations. They sent their money away instead of dealing with their neighbors and supporting their own towns. Not only do the towns suffer but the farmers as well are injured. The boys become discourage and disgusted to live in a community with only a dead town in sight. They leave the home, the father has no help. His farm goes down, and he wants to sell out. He advertises it for sale. A prospective buyer comes along. He feels the deadness of the place and makes up his mind that the whole neighborhood is no good.

Altogether too long have these houses been allowed to prey on the incredulity of our people, and a vigorous effort should at once be made to protect their rights and their homes, and bring to light the true advantages of supporting their home retail stores. Proper education and it alone will save the situation.

Up to the Merchants.

The truth is so overwhelmingly in favor of the retail stores that it only requires to be understood in order to win the support of the general public and save the integrity of the best system for distributing the products of the world to the people.

Retail merchants, what are you going to do? Your business is threatened; your villages and towns are in danger; the convenience and interests of the people are being undermined through enticing and misleading advertisements.

Ninety-five per cent. of the post offices are owned by retail merchants for which they receive no rent and do the work without reasonable compensation, and yet these departmental stores are sending their goods to villages and towns for less than actual postal cost, using the merchants as instruments to kill their own business, and without contributing one cent towards the support and maintenance of the municipality.

Only One Proper Method.

Farmers and working people are deceived against their own interests through deceptive representation, and even our governments on both sides of politics are not aware of the condition into which the country is drifting in this respect.

The only method known to the world that will give the people satisfactory service is through retail system and any attempt through any other channel can never be complete, and therefore to that extent will cripple and impair the machinery which is necessary for the good of the country and which must be kept intact.

To make this clear, let all the retail stores close up their places of business, and what would at once be the result? But let the mail-order stores close and the wheels of the commercial machinery would run on undisturbed.

When will the people learn to be fair to themselves even if they are not to their neighbors? The question is of such vast importance and so far reaching that it should be taken up by the local press in every town and discussed in clubs, farmers institutes, retail merchants' associations, and even an occasional sermon on the "ethics of trade" or "the duty of neighbor to neighbor" would be appreciated and do good.

Merchants should do their best to give the people good service, but never rest as long as parcels come regularly from outside. They should let every man, woman and child realize that if they expect to make their livings in their own towns and live there and expect the streets, schools, and churches kept up, that the merchants have a perfect right to expect them to buy their goods from them. No person with ordinary decency could go into a store for a trifling thing without feeling a sense of guilt, when it is known that the bulk of his money goes to the department stores. Would it not be a thousand times more desirable to have our people scattered over our fair land, and live on farm, villages and towns, than to have them crowded into a few large cities?

Therefore do not allow a few gigantic concerns to destroy the happy conditions of country life. The key of the situation lies with the merchants themselves. They should boom their own business so energetically that the mail-order house will be lost sight of by the people of the community.

The cause of many failures is due to bad financing instead of bad business. The trouble is few business men know exactly "where they are at."

A detailed statement should be kept of all obligations. The business man should get along as far as possible without giving notes, and when he does give notes he should see to it that the notes are taken up when due.

The business man who overstocks shows he is a bad financier. The man who buys too much on possibilities makes a mistake.

As you go along this year you shou'd make statistics of the receipts and expenses by the day, week, month, and year. With these figures you can make up a budget of your receipts and expenses of the coming year with reasonable correctness.

Keep your resources well in hand. Buy often rather than buy in large quantities.

Retail Grocers Institute an Automobile Delivery

The Only One in Hamilton and One of the Very Few in Canada—Easily Does the Work of Two Delivery Horses—Always Awaiting Orders—Owners Find it a Profitable Investment—Can Deliver Forty Orders per Hour—Other Progressive Methods Showing an Adventurous Spirit.

"I don't want to be at the tail end of anything new."

These are words of John Lampman, of John Lampman & Son, retail grocers and meat dealers, Hamilton, Ont. There are only a dozen of them there but they are words which should be carefully considered by many other retail merchants throughout Canada.

To show that Mr. Lampman "practices what he preaches" it may be here stated that :

He has an automobile delivery which gives rapid service ;

He has his own ice house to supply his refrigerators ;

He has a large refrigerator built right into his store measuring 10 feet by 9 feet ;

His equipments are modern, including cash register, show cases and computing scales ;

An elevator extends from the ground to the fourth story to handle stock between warehouse and store ;

His store closes at 7 o'clock every night but Saturday.

The most important feature about the business of John Lampman & Son, however, is the automobile delivery. The owners consider it more valuable to them than any two other delivery outfits they could possibly secure.

Last April they purchased the car and instituted the new systwm. It is a big 30 h.p. "Jackson" machine with two boxes—one for delivering groceries and meats and the other for pleasure purposes. The whole top can be taken off and exchanged for the other in about 20 or 30 minutes.

Lampman & Son have the only 'auto' delivery system in Hamilton and they doubt if any other grocery store in Ontario, or in Canada for that matter, can claim one. It is a fact at any rate that that they are few. As to the service rendered when the car has on its delivery top, the owners claim it unbeatable.

"We can catch a train with a basket of fruit in four minutes after we get the the order," declared Mr. Lampman, and the station is considerable more than a mile away at that.

Forty Accounts per Hour.

Lampman & Son send out their accounts at the end of the month and by actual timing on one occasion they found that they distributed 48 bills in 55 minutes and their customers are by no means bunched in one section of Hamilton. Of course in such a case the machinery is never allowed to stop. It is claimed that it will deliver 40 orders in an hour, which is much more than any two horses can very well do.

When the automobile is doing the delivering, it is 'on the job' all the time. If two orders are taken at practically the same time it can have the one first put-up delivered and arrive back at the store before the second is ready—providing it has only a reasonable distance to go.

The delivery boy expressed it nicely by saying : "You don't have no time to ride."

From April last until the middle of September the car had traveled 4,260 miles as shown by the distance register. During that time Mr. Lampman had scarcely expended a dollar on repairs. The only thing necessary to buy when the machinery goes right is the gasoline, and he does not consider the expense of that at all equivalent to the feed of two horses and the wear and tear of wagons, harness as well as horses.

"The horses eat all the time whether working or not ; the auto only when it goes," is the way Mr. Lampman says it.

He bought it as a money proposition and he is well satisfied with the results. When he does heavy purchasing on the market he takes the car down and on one occasion he brought back with little effort and in a short time 1,500 pounds of beef, veal, vegetables, etc. It was loaded so high that the driver had to stand on the boards at the side.

Costs Little for Ice.

At the rear of the store proper Lampman & Son have a large ice house in which they store enough ice to last them all summer. It is so constructed, that working in conjunction with the hoist, little heavy lifting is necessary. When the bottom row of ice-blocks has been all arranged, the hoist is used to elevate the next load and so on to the proper height. A series of doors are placed in the side of the ice house next the hoist so that when the ice reaches above any one it is closed and the next highest used.

The same convenience exists when ice has to be placed in the large refrigerator, or rather into the receptacle above the refrigerator. It can, of course, be taken out of any door onto the hoist which fs lowered or elevated, as the case may be, to a level with a sort of slide (marked A in the illustration) which leads to the receptacle over the refrigerator and on a level with it.

There is always plenty of ice on hand and so the meats, butter, etc., are always kept fresh for customers all the year 'round.

Another feature to the Lampman store is that the company cook practically all their own meats and cure their own hogs—and Mr. Lampman 19 years ago started a business with enough money to buy 2 cattle and a calf.

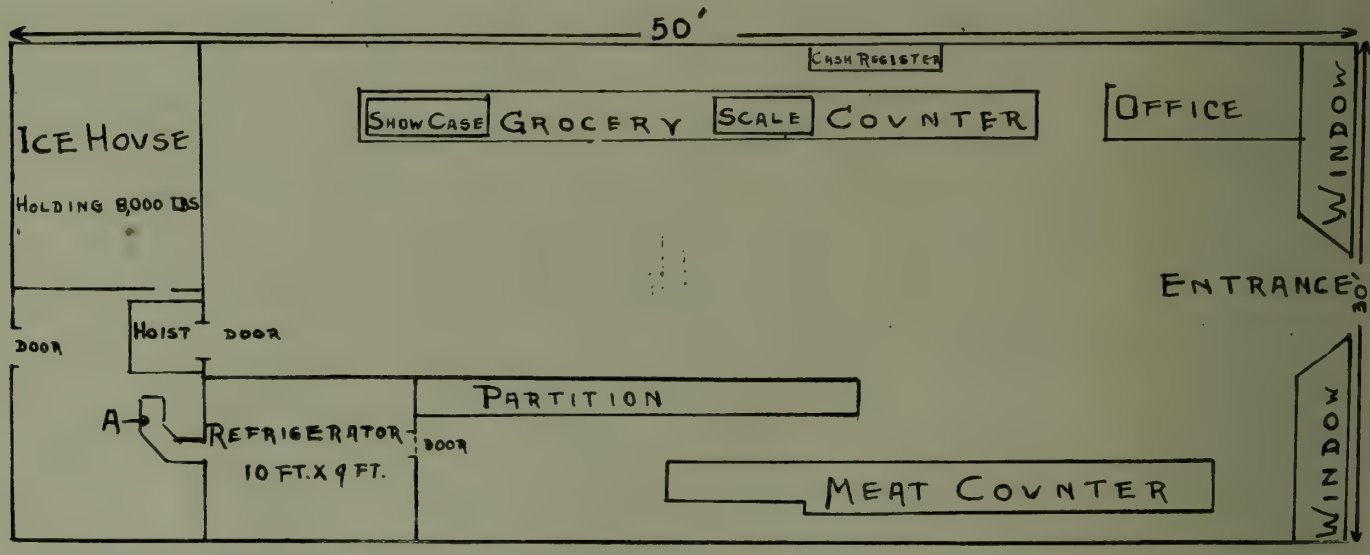
The elevator runs to the fourth storey where the cutting and engine rooms are located and where the sausage are made. The storehouse is also located there. The present premises have been occupied for thirteen years—with several changes and additions to the building. When Mr. Lampman arrived on the scene there was nothing but four old walls. His son was admitted into partnership with him last June.

Early Closing.

One of the store methods is early closing. Every night with the exception of Saturday the key turns in the lock at 7 o'clock. Although at present he keeps open until 11 o'clock on Saturday night he intends in the near future to take off another hour.



By closing early he does not believe he is any the worse off. His customers know the rules and make no objections whatever to abide by them, and he finds that the extra hour, or in some cases several hours, gives both himself and family plenty of time for recreation. His automobile comes in handy for this and long trips are often taken after tea and on holidays and Sundays which contribute a great deal to the health and pleasure of those who take in the jaunts. The extra advertising he gets from his auto has also been profitable, for many people, you know, like to have their household necessities delivered in a motor car.

Lampman & Son do a good trade both in groceries and meats; they employ 4 in the store and two drivers. Their store is modernly equipped with automatic computing scales, cash register, etc., and their meat department is almost altogether separated by a partition, as shown in the illustration. The grocery side of this partition is built up with shelving and bins.

Speaking tubes extend from the store to the kitchen and warehouse, and there is also an extension telephone in the dwelling room.

Sometimes an occasional "shop-lifter" which may or may not be a boy, drifts into the store, particularly in the fruit season. A device which can often be used with good results to detect such a one is a mirror. Lampman & Son have one placed just above the cash register. At the same time it comes in handy for the ladies, who always appreciate any little attention of that character.

The Lampman advice is: Keep out of the rut and don't be the last one to make the change.

STUDY PUBLIC TASTES.

"What shall I advertise and what goods shall I know show in my window just now?" is a question often heard. The advice of a large London, England, storekeeper who has built up an immense business through advertising, and especially window-dressing advertisement, is to study the public fancy; that, he affirms, will lay the basis of a successful business, and prove a sure foundation to work upon. It is obvious he claims, that to display goods for which there is no demand, to exhibit articles which are either unseasonable or at the moment out of fashion, is waste of time and space. To study the public fancy is to take thought of what is going on around; to ascertain what other traders are selling, what the fashionable world is doing, and especially how circumstances and conditions influence fashions, is time well spent. Fashions go in cycles, and tradesmen follow one another in succession. Those who study such things, he believes, and dip deep into the source of commercial knowledge know right well that what is fashionable and salable in a certain locality to-day will not be in demand to-morrow. For that reason the trader cannot do better than look ahead and prepare for the public fancy. To catch business at the right moment shows that the trader is alive to the possibilities which opportunity opens out.

There's no argument equal to a happy smile.

Selling By Weight---The Only Honest Method

Such is the Opinion of a successful Retail Grocer—Finds Profit in Substituting the Scale for the Measure—Where the Telephone Number is Unnecessary—How Best to Buy Cereals—Value of Shorter Terms of Credit—A Well-Equipped Store.

"When I get a hamper of beans or peas I find exactly what I have and what they cost. I then weigh them into small boxes and put a price on each so that I am sure of my profits.

"I never sell ciscoe herring by the dozen—they all go by the pound."

There is something significant in these two statements of David W. Clark, Avenue Road, Toronto, a grocer who has been in business for years, and who keeps well apace with the advance of the times. For to look at Mr. Clark's store, both interior and exterior, one could not think otherwise.

Mr. Clark is a firm believer in the weigh scale as an honest means of selling goods and uses it wherever it is practicable. In the first place, he is very careful always to know what he secures from the jobber or manufacturer. If he gets in a hamper of beans, he weighs them carefully and determines the cost per pound. He is then in a position to fix his retail price in order that he has not his trouble for nothing. The beans are carefully weighed out into small boxes, upon which is placed his retail price. He therefore knows exactly what the beans cost him and better still he knows he is selling them at a profit.

One of the great troubles that still hangs onto the trade is selling goods at prices that do not make those goods profitable to handle. In many cases, Mr. Clark maintains, a grocer will get in, say a hamper of beans. He knows what the whole thing cost and he sells at a price which he imagines will "let him out." Frequently, however, he is practically selling at cost or losing money—all because he doesn't exercise the proper care in weighing what he buys and sells.

Habit of Choosing the Biggest.

The reason why he sells his ciscoe herring by the pound is to eliminate the practice of purchasers picking out the biggest dozen from the rest in the box, placing them on top and then coming into the store wanting a "dozen herring."

The grocer has no other course to follow than to hand out the first dozen he comes to, with the result that he has the smallest left on his hands. When the bottom of the keg or box is almost reached his big herring are gone and it is almost imposible to offer the rest at the same price as the others. He often gets himself into trouble when he does, and he loses money when he doesn't.

Mr. Clark finds that the only simple way out of the difficulty is to weigh the herring and sell them by the pound. No woman registers a "kick" about size or measure when she sees the goods go on the scale. The grocer is not "beating" her, and her suspicions are never aroused so that she has no reason to purchase her goods elsewhere.

Potatoes are similarly treated. They are never sold by measure or by the bag—except the weight is known in every case.

Mr. Clark makes a practice of weighing everything that comes into the store in measure. He believes implicitely in the scale, as a prevention against unfair discrimination among customers, and as the means of producing an honest deal.

An Unnecessary Outlay.

In addition to his ideas concerning weights and measures given above, Mr. Clark has many other interesting opinions in retail methods.

"One thing that has always struck me as being silly and unnecessary," he said the other day, "is painting the telephone number on the grocery waggon, on billboards, or on the window.

"No person is going to stop on the street, if he sees your waggon going by, take out a memorandum book and dot down your telephone number. When he desires to call you up he looks for your number in the directory; he never gets it off a billboard, window or wagon.

"I believe it is a good idea to have the telephone number printed on your counter-check book or bill-head. In that case the housekeeper who has the duplicate of any order may save time."

Mr. Clark likes to see a check-book headed as simply as possible. His own contains nothing but his address, phone and name.

He never goes out of his store for orders, but deems it more advisable to carefully attend to customers coming into the store.

Purchasing Cereal Goods.

"There is one company," said Mr. Clark, "which takes a wise plan in selling its cereal product to the trade. Its representatives do not advise grocers to take large quantities in consideration for which they will throw in a few extra cases. This company wants to sell you what you think you can reasonably sell in a certain length of time, and it never loads you up.

"Often grocers are induced to purchase more breakfast foods than they can reasonably sell before they get stale. In that case they become discouraged, because they do not care to give a customer a food that should have been consumed weeks before. It spoils the sale of those goods."

The company to which Mr. Clark has reference, allows the grocer a certain number of cases at the end of the year, that number to depend on the amount he had sold during the year.

Shorter Terms of Credit.

Commenting on the recent plan of the Toronto Fruit and Produce Association whereby the members collect their accounts weekly, Mr. Clark thought the idea a good one. It tended to keep down the number of inexperienced men entering the grocery trade and upsetting existing conditions, simply because they didn't understand cost of goods, expense of doing business and figuring profits.

He had once read that with the introduction of machinery into the factories in a certain place, the greatest percentage of unemployed entered the grocery business. The insurance business came second.

This went to show how men will drift into the grocery trade without the first knowledge of it, and without the faintest idea of having any difficulties to contend with. The ultimatum, therefore, of the wholesale fruit men, Mr. Clark maintans, was a splendid idea. It tends, he says, to elevate the trade and keep it running on a higher moral plane.

A glance at the accompanying plan of the interior of the Clark grocery shows up-to-date equipment, and some new arrangements. He has the latest type of bin-fixtures, a handsome cash register, modern computing scales, an electrically operated coffee mill, a refrigerator and meat slicer.

Confectionery is carried and to display this attractively, show cases are used.

The office is an elevated one, at the end of the store and entered by a stairway leading from the warehouse at the rear. This is both convenient and saves a good deal of room.

The above methods and sugestions are valuable to any grocer in-as-much as they have been used with success by Mr. Clark, who is certainly making good in the retail grocery business arena.

Means of Increasing the Sales of Canned Goods

The Power Lies in The Store Methods of the Retail Grocer—Education Among the Consumers Necessary to Offset Wrong Impressions—Canned Goods May be Easily Displayed—Advertising Systems That are Valuable.

If he goes about it in the proper manner every retail grocer can easily increase his sales in canned goods. The whole secret lies in education, advertising and proper display.

A valuable education can be conducted by advertisement and conversation personally or through your clerks. The most effective way to combat the untruthful articles in sensational newspapers and misleading advertisements, especially about canned goods, is for every retailer and every clerk in his employ, and every member of their families, to constantly state the truth, which is that food hermetically sealed in tin cans is preserved by heat, and as long as it is kept from the air (that is, neither swelled or leaking), it is a sound, pure, wholesome, palatable food.

A writer on this subject states that no chemicals are used to preserve or color "canned goods." He quotes what a prominent professor says: "The only coloring matter usually found in canned vegetables is copper  the preservative most commonly used in canned vagetables are borax, sodium benzoate, and salicylic acid; sodium sulphite is sometimes added to bleach the product and to act as a preservative; saccharine, vegetables is copper  the preservatives most commonly used in canned vegetas sweet corn as a sweetening agent," and then tells how to detect the presence of these chemicals.

This professor claims the writer, either has not analyzed canned vegetables in the past few years, or has found only "traces" of the chemicals mentioned, as they are not used by canned goods packers. The natural product, peas, beans, corn, etc., contain traces of several of these chemicals, as analyses by Dr. Wiley and others of the fresh vegetable have shown, but nowhere in America can now be found, as far as he is aware, a packer who adds them to the vegetable when canned.

Nature, the great chemist, in her laboratory of soil and air produces nearly every chemical known, and in her choicest food products from land and water she leaves traces of these things, giving color and flavor, varying the appearance and taste of these foods to please the eye and palate of the consumer. The canned goods packer adds salt and sugar for seasoning; he cooks his canned goods to preserve them, in the cheapest and best container known—a tin can—and to the extent of hundreds of millions of cans furnishes the best fed people in the world, with a variety of pure, wholesome and economical food prepared in the most cleanly manner, unobtainable otherwise.

Every retail grocer and every employe should know these facts and should never cease to preach them in season and out whenever the occasion arises.

Admit of Splendid Displays.

Canned goods are probably used more than any other article sold in the grocery store for display purposes. The reason for this is that they can be arranged easily in many different fashion. The labels on can goods are usually attractive and they can be so placed as to add much to the shelf or window appearance.

When window displays are made of canned goods, those displays should not be allowed to remain too long. Change them often and give the eye of the prospective purchaser something new to look at, for a window display—no matter how neat—becomes stale if allowed to remain too long.

Very often retailers make mistakes by selling an inferior quality of goods when the price of canned goods advance. This may at the time be a profitable scheme, but the ultimate injury it causes, more than counterbalances any good it may do in the matter of making profits. As soon as the customer discovers she is obtaining an inferior article in place of the one that she has always purchased, she will not give her custom long to that store—particularly if she is a particular customer and most people, who can at all afford it, are particular about what they eat.

Purity in Different Grades.

But it must not always be supposed that purity and healthfulness are regulated by quality always; in the majority of cases the same care and skill is taken in canning the standard grade as the fancy extra, the can of corn or peas and almost all other canned foods, is as healthful and clean as the high-priced can of the same article. It, of course, may not be as palatable or as attractive in appearance but the food value is the same.

To advertise canned goods at the proper time is a big factor in the sales of the retailers' stocks. Ads. that convey information and convince the intending purchaser—those that tell, for instance, of the excellent quality and why that quality is excellent—are the kind that are necessary to sell the goods.

To sum up—the increase in the sale of canned goods from the store practically depends upon the grocer himself. Your customers to a large extent need your judgment, your knowledge and advice; never mislead them by personal conversation or by untruthful advertising. Simply speak the truth as you know it, and despite sensational stories with little or no foundations, you will increase your sales of canned goods.

The Common-Sense Method of Handling Tea.

How Sales Can be Increased if Proper Course is Taken — Over-Stocking a Bad Fault—Tea Should be Kept Away From Many Articles Because of its Absorbing Characteristic—Teach Customers How to Make Good Tea—Keep an Eye on the Peddler.

By B. H. Thomas.

For a grocer to increase and even hold his tea trade he must make a study of the methods of taking care of his tea in the store. The value of tea to the consumer is derived from its flavor and one of the great difficulties is being able to present to a customer the same flavored tea which you know he or she likes, week in and week out.

To begin with, care should be exercised in the buying of tea for the store. Whether package or bulk goods it is not necessary in these days of travelers to overload on tea. If a package of tea is opened and left in contact with the air for any length of time it loses flavor and grades of deterioration occur.

A dealer with many years' experience in handling of all kinds of teas advises that the tea stocks in the store be turned over every month where it is at all possible. This is possible in the thickly populated districts where the grocer knows there will be a traveler around at regular intervals. Of course, a different condition of affairs prevails in isolated districts. Once a month may seem rather often, but he claimed that if the best satisfaction from customers was striven for, it was not any too frequent.

All kinds of tea lose quality with age and in this respect they are rather unlike whisky. Not only that, but the success of a business depends on its turn over—goods converted into ready money. Money begets money in interest but a shelf or a chest of tea does not produce more tea or money. On the other hand its value decreases the longer it remains on the shelf or in the chest.

Do not therefore let any salesman load you up with more tea than you want, simply because he offers you lurid bargains, long datings and large discounts. Let the wholesaler carry it and take the chances and if you want to spend some extra money increase your assortment of goods. A grocer seldom finds that he can sell more tea just because he has a heavy stock.

A prominent Canadian tea manufacturer recently said: "It must be borne in mind that all tea deteriorates with age, and after it is eighteen months or two years old it should not be drunk. Many grocers are ignorant of this fact and carry over teas from year to year until they have entirely lost their flavor and beneficial qualities."

The location of tea in the store is another important feature. It is imbued with that contrary quality of absorbing flavors from many other articles common to the grocery. On the other hand it does not impart its flavor to anything else very readily.

In this connection soap deserves special mention. See that no tea is in proximity to a bar of soap. Care should also be taken to see that tea is not close to spices, coffee, matches, coal oil, acid fruits, such as lemons and oranges, and cheese. These articles readily impart their flavor and tea just as readily absorbs it.

Many occasions arise when a grocer or his salesmen selling tea can educate customers how to use it. Every customer appreciates a word of advice now and then, if it is given in the proper spirit. Tell your customer how necessary it is to use fresh boiled water in making tea and if you care to give advice about her tea-pot point out to her that the old fashioned earthenware pot has as yet been unsurpassed. Also impress upon her the need of taking the tea off the leaves after it has been on from 5 to 8 minutes. This is because the tannin in the leaf escapes if it is left in the water too long and tannin is what gives it that undesirable bitter taste.

Very often a customer stops buying tea from her regular grocer because she, unconsciously, of course, neglects to follow out the above ideas and therefore thinks the tea is bad. Educate her judiciously and strengthen her trade with you.

Grocers and Tea Peddlers.

Because there is usually profit in selling tea we find peddlers handling it all over the country and it is the merchant's affair to curtail these sales as much as possible. Wherever a grocer finds that a customer is buying tea from a peddler he should devise some means to regain that trade. Point out if you can how much superior your tea is and it might be good policy to occasionally give some samples suggesting that she compare the two. Few peddlers have any particular knowledge about teas, so that it is difficult for a purchaser to buy from them with any degree of accuracy; on the other hand specialists prepare with much care the teas that are sold to grocers and a grocer usually knows whether he can conscientiously recommend them or not. The peddler is seldom in a position to do this. If a grocer really knows the goods he is selling he can easily increase his sales.

Use of Displays.

An occasional tea display aids in increasing the business and draws attention to the fact that you carry reliable goods—that is if you do. When these displays are made, make use of one or two attractive display cards and some price tickets and you will be surprised to find the good they do.

When a package of tea is opened and placed in the window or when bulk tea is shown, it should not be sold afterwards particularly if the rays of the sun touch it. The heat draws out the flavor and when that is gone it is not much use.

Some teas are more easily sold than others because they are more systematically advertised. Grocers should consider this point carefully when stocking up—and they should also be careful to have the goods on the shelves when anybody calls for them and remember always that quality more than price indicates the value of tea to them.

THE RICE GOD.

In the Malay peninsula(after a general propitiatory service has been held as an "apology" to the rice for cutting it, the "rice soul" is diligently sought. First the spot where the best rice grows is selected; then seven stems are chosen, each having seven joints. Within this sacred bundle resides the soul of the whole precious field, and, dressed in swaddling clothes like a live infant, it is borne home in a basket and tenderly, reverently, placed on a new sleeping mat.

After the rice harvest in Ceylon the priests take a little old god called Mareii down to the river. A hole is dug where the water is shallow, and into this is crammed a bag of dry rice, with the god placed on top. The saturated rice expands, forcing the image upward, so that in about fifteen days it comes to the surface and is welcomed as a new god with acclamations of great joy.

"Most Complete Grocery Store in the Province"

That is How Travelers Designate the Establishment of Nahrgang & Co., of Palmerston—Attractive Exterior and Interior, and Fitted up With Practically all Modern Conveniences — Caters to High-class Trade and Keeps the Best Possible Goods —The Reward of Service.

You often hear merchants in small towns or villages remark, "Oh, this store is good enough for me in this place but if I were in a big city like Montreal or Toronto I would have things looking better."

But nowadays the tendency all over the country is up-to-date stores with a view to giving the best possible service to customers. Equipment and cleanliness count for much in the matter of service, for no store can be serviceable to the best class of trade without these requirements.

This has been recognized by many merchants and even in the smaller places, among them being Palmerston, Ont., where Nahrgang & Co. have one of the handsomest and finest equipped stores in the country, whether it be city, town or village. There is practically nothing known in the store equipment line that Nahrgang & Co. havn't installed. Commercial travelers whose good fortunes have taken them to Palmerston, claim that it is the most complete in the province. Mr. Nahrgang, jr., is the proprietor and he is only 25 years of age.

The success of this business is based on the service made possible by such an up-to-date establishment and the quality of the goods on the shelves.

The present proprietor succeeded his father six years ago and since that time he remodeled the store. He claims that both the front and interior appearance have had a great deal to do with attracting the high class of trade in Palmerston.

Attention to Customers.

"We carry the best classes of goods and we treat our customers courteously," says Mr. Nahrgang, "and this was why our business grew so that we had to enlarge.

"We saw an opening on Main Street and so decided to branch out. We bought the building and remodeled the entire ground flour.

"In laying our plans we determined to instal nothing but modern fixtures and equipment, and we are now certain that we have taken the proper course."

A glance at the store certainly convinces one that Nahrgang & Co. are after the high-class trade. They have one of the most improved bin-fixture arrangements, including bins for spices teas, biscuits, fruits, etc. The shelving is also of modern type and all is finished in dark oak.

In addition to these, there is a combination bin and silent salesman, an order counter, and large work counter all fitted with bins. They have one of the largest cash registers sold, a refrigerator as well as a cool meat counter, meat slicer, cheese cutter, computing scales and, in fact, practically everything that belongs to modern store equipment.

Nahrgang & Co. are still running the other store.

Being as yet only a young man, Mr. Nahrgang is to be complimented on his aggressive business character. He has done remarkably well as a grocer so far, or in other words groceries have done well for him.

Grocery Store Proprietor Without Any Experience

Entered Against His Inclination But Became One of Most Prominent Members of the Trade in the United States—Business Career Begun in Canada — How Trade was Built Up—Changes in Methods During Forty Years.

By Thomas Martindale.

For forty years the children of Israel were kept wandering in the desert looking for and hoping to reach the Promised Land. During this period a new generation had arisen. It was strong and lusty of frame; used to hardships, privation, hunger and thirst. "The Promised Land" was pictured to them as being a land flowing with "milk and honey." Their imaginations, no doubt, reveled in the idea that when this delectable country would be finally reached their work would be over—then they could rest—each man under his own "vine and fig tree," and their lot would be one of continued happiness and bliss.

It so happens that I too have been in the wilderness of the grocery business for forty years. My entrance into it was without previous preparation, experience or knowledge. At one bound I vaulted into the saddle as a proprietor without having any apprenticeship or any idea as to how I should manage the business. That I have succeeded was more perhaps from industry and perseverance, and in always keeping a hopeful and cheerful front than from anything else.

One day an Irishman met me returning from a chase after three wild ducks, which had led me down the Alleghany River below Oil City, Pa., a distance of over three miles and a half, before I got a shot at them. That made a total walk of over seven miles. I had my gun in one hand and two of the ducks in the other. Pat accosted me and asked we where I had got the "burds." After telling him whereabouts they were shot: "But did ye shoot thim yerself?" "I did." "Air ye shure?" "I am." "Well, then, I think it was more by good luck than good aimin'," and as my friend's term of good luck was but another name for Providence, I am inclined to believe that in the matter of my forty years' experience in the grocery business and its ultimate of success, whatever degree that may be, that Providence surely was a leading factor in it, for "There's a Divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them as we will."

The Right Hand Side of Nahrgang & Co.'s Store in Palmerston, Ont., Effectively Illustrating the Fine Appearance Made by Up-to-Date Fixtures.

Began With Dry Goods.

If the reader will tarry with me awhile, I will briefly narrate the various providential happenings that finally led me to my entrance into the trade that it has been my lot to labor in for the forty years. I was brought up to the dry goods business; left school at 13, after a year and a half's schooling, which was broken frequently by the necessity of my staying at home to help mother out with tending to the children. I was the eldest of twelve. I sawed the cordwood, shovelled the snow, spaded the garden, milked the cow, fed the pigs, went to the brewery for grain-wash for the cow, washed the dishes at times, and did everything that a healthy, energetic and willing boy could be expected to do.

Then at 13 I was hired as errand boy in a dry goods store at a dollar and a half a week. For 7 years I worked for the same firm and left them because, in giving me an advance in wages from four hundred a year to five hundred, I was told that no matter how long I might stay, I would never get any higher salary, as that was the highest salary then paid in London.

A Manager in Toronto.

I went to Toronto, and got a position at $450 per year and in 2 years climbed to the position of manager. At the age of 23 I left there and turned up in Boston, taking a position as salesman in the dress goods department of Churchill, Watson & Co., which had been vacated by Jim Fisk, later of the world-famed firm of Gould & Fisk. I went from there to Pittsburg to go into the velocipede business. The man who had induced me to go into it, however, backed out, and the business didn't start. I was very anxious to get out of the dry goods business, because I had taken a supreme dislike to it. Chance took me to Oil City, where I secured a job as engineer on an oil well, and running the engine. The boiler was heated by natural gas from the well, and this made the work very light. The well was two miles from Oil City, over a spur of the Alleghany Mountains. I did my own cooking and washing and carried my groceries on my back twice a week over the mountains.

Carried on a Loose Business.

The man I traded with had formerly been a raftsman; he knew nothing about business—didn't know whether he was making money or not. He asked me to help him take stock, which I did, and found his busines a losing venture. But he had a good stand; the frame store building costing him $300, was his chief asset. The ground it stood on was leased at $20 per month. His statements showed that he was about $1,500 to the bad, if his debts had all been correctly recorded. I bought a half interest in the store conditionally, in June, 1869, paying him but a small amount for it; and if his debts had been incorrectly given and were more than his statement showed, he was to refund me my money and the deal would be off.

A period of 10 days only was sufficient to show that he had over-looked at least $500 worth of more debts, and I asked for the return of the money, but, alas he had spent it. And so the business with its debts was transferred to me.

I had saved some money and sent to my father for a loan of four hundred more. When this arrived the debts were paid off gradually, but I changed all of the buying accounts as I soon learned that the old man had been badly imposed upon by the people of whom he bought. The store had one counter, 15 feet long, a good show window—no basement but a room overhead. The size of the store was 20 x 35 feet. For several months I slept on the counter with my head on a low cheese box. This was not a good thing to do, as I was in full view of the window and people soon found this out, and awakened me for all sorts of small purchases during the night. Besides this, the rats were a terror. Big, savage fellows they were, who ran along the shelves and occasionally jumped down to the counter and played tag over my body. The climax came when one old fellow ran right across my face. So I fitted up the room overhead into two parts—a sleeping room and a kitchen.

Free Ad. From Lame Horse.

In those days there were no free deliveries, but I bought an ancient horse with one leg crippled, an old box wagon and a harness made from rope and leather, all for $25. The horse went by the name of "Limpy Sam." He brought trade by the free advertising that I got out of him, as his appearance on the street was the cause of many jibes and criticisms at the expense of his owner. I painted the store in red and white checkered squares, and called it the "Checkered Store." Afterwards I opened another store across Oil Creek and painted it blue. I bought an interest in still another, which we painted red, so I came to have the "Checkered Front," the "Blue Store" and the "Red Store." Then I sold out my interest in all of these stores, built a brick store on the north bank of the Alleghany river and launched into the wholesale business. This was in 1873, a year of failures in business in many parts of the United States, and on account of low-priced oil in the valleys of Oil Creek and the Alleghany, it was a year of very general business disaster. However, while a number of jobbers in that district failed, I managed to pay dollar for dollar. I then went out of the wholesale trade, and re-entered the retail end of the business, starting it as a strictly cash store.

In the latter part of 1874 I came down to Philadelphia, and on January 23, 1875, we opened the "California Store" at Tenth and Market Streets. Here we have been ever since, but, oh how the store and the business have grown. It will be recalled that I started for myself in June 1869, so in the briefest possible space, I have glanced over the intervening time between 1869 and 1909.

The Darkey and the Rat.

For many years I personally opened the store at 7 a.m., and one morning when the snow was deep and the horse cars were tied up with the snow blockade, and the snow was yet falling, I reached the store a few minutes late. There were two colored men waiting at the door, and when they were let into the store, they asked for two pounds of coffee, and they wanted it ground. A short time previous to this, a man had sold us a lot of rat traps made like a big spider or centipede. They were made with five hooks, which were set with a spring, and the traps were hung by a cord some inches from the floor. These traps caught a lot of rats, but they weren't strong enough to hold them, for the animals would tear themselves loose with the loss of a foot, or perhaps an eye. This morning when walking in the yet uncertain light, on entering the store, I saw ahead of me a big rat, which didn't try very much to get out of the way, and I planted my foot firmly upon him, and found that one of his eyes was pulled out by one of the hooks of a trap. I tied a piece of strong string to his tail, and then tied the string, without thinking of what I was doing to the handle of the coffee mill. Then I went to the front of the store, lighted a few gas jets and weighed out two pounds of coffee for the colored men. A woman came in just then, and I asked the men if they would grind the coffee themselves so that I could wait on the woman; this they agreed to do. I walked to the back part of the store and put the coffee into the hopper. Now, where the mill was standing, there was no light whatever, excepting from the jets at the front. One of the men stood on one side of the mill to pull at the handle and the other opposite to him. When they started the big wheel around there was a loud yell from "darky No. 1," who ran out of the store, showing every sign of a terrible fright, and at the next revolution of the handle the other darky followed the first, also scraming at the top of his voice, and I never saw them afterwards, and this is what had happened.

The big rat was tied to the handle of the mill; the first revolution brought it up with a dull thud against the chin of "darkey No. 1"; the next whirled the rat down on "No. 2's" head, face and chest, and drawing much blood from his face with its claws in its rapid descent. The men evidently thought the rat had jumped out of the mill. The old coffee mills are now superseded by modern mills run by electricity, and this incident serves very well to illustrate in a way the difference between the past and the present in our business.

Difference in Methods.

We used to pry out currants from a 300-pound barrel with a big three-pronged fork. Now we sell them already cleaned, in pound cartons, and fifty-pound boxes.

The fixtures in the business are now so different, and the methods of doing business so entirely out of place with old-time methods that it is very hard to realize how very primitive our business was forty years ago.

Hints From Experience.

One thing remains the same—and that is that honesty won out then, and will do so now; perservance, pluck, and intelligent mastery of the trade then brought success, and you cannot attain success even now without these qualities, even coupled with all the accessories to the trade which we enjoy at present. In other words, there's no royal road to prosperity in the business of to-day, excepting the dealer keeps to the homely, necessary and well-worn principles of truth and honesty, cheerfulness and courtesy, eternal vigilance and untiring industry, cleanliness of person and of store, caution in buying and likewise in selling, together with the ability to make a fair profit, and that "oft-times repeated."

A Strong Business Founded on a Quality Basis

Milestones Marking Sixty-nine Years of Progress of Jas. Osborne & Son, Hamilton—Extensive Importer of High-class Wines and Liquors—Percentage of Losses From Bad Debts Very Small — Book-keeping and Credit Customers Carefully Watched.

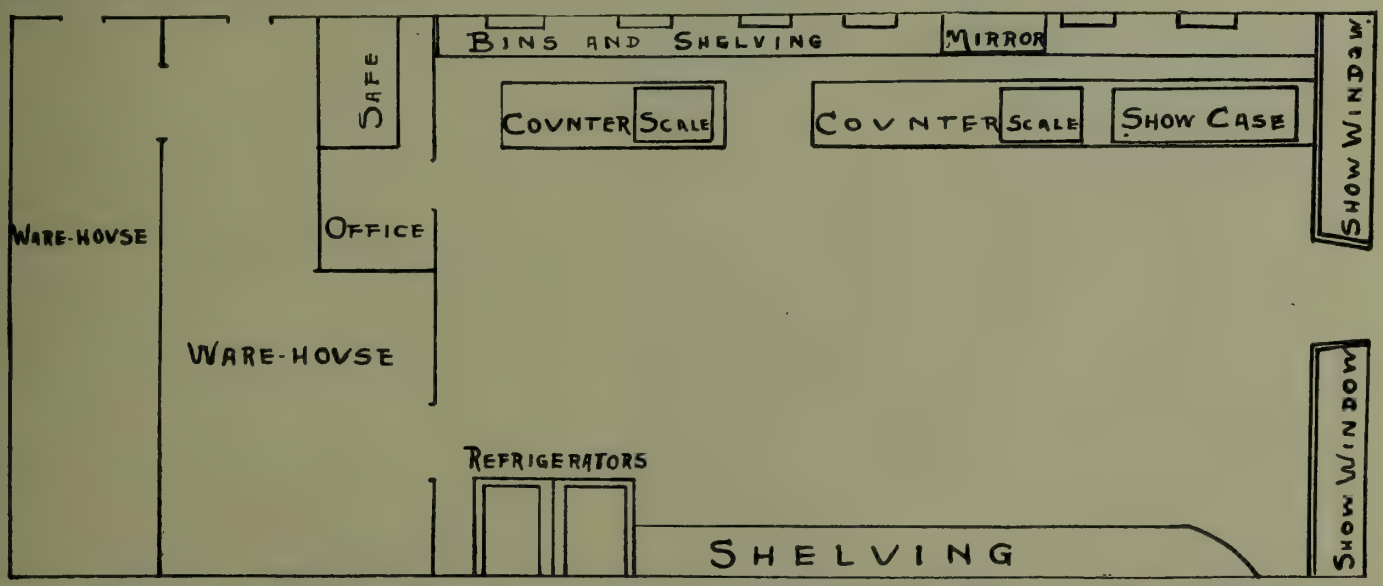
Any business that withstands the test of time for practically "three score years and ten" must be a rugged one. It is the same whether it be retailer, wholesaler or manufacturer. Such a business must have been founded on good strong principles and these must have been applied at every stage of the game.

Back in 1840—sixty-nine years ago—the grocery business now known as that of Jas. Osborne & Son, Hamilton, was established. To-day Jas. Osborne & Son is recognized as the "Michie" of Hamilton. The trade is a select one in groceries and liquor. Last year the business amounted to about $75,000.

To get back to the reason why this business should not only have held together but expanded—it is answered by the one word "Quality." Quality in goods, quality in service and the extensive advertising of quality in both are the attributes to the success of the Osborne business according to the present proprietor, John Young Osborne.

The late James Osborne was the founder. He was born in Ayrshire, Scotland and came to Canada in 1832, locating in Beamsville in the grocery business where he remained until 1840. When he first opened in Hamilton he kept a general store including drygoods, boots and shoes and crockery. His system in the store was the Old Country variety and this has been followed by his son with marked success. He was one of the original directors of the Canada Life Association and remained on the board while he lived. He took a deep interest in educational matters and was chairman of the School Board in Hamilton at different times. His death occurred in 1886 when his son took charge.

Jas. Osborne & Son look carefully after their stock. They necessarily have to carry a large quantity of goods to do a $75,000 trade but quality is more particular. Mr. Osborne only purchases what he considers the best goods. He is an extensive importer in all lines including his wines and liquors which are among the finest produced in the old world and which constitute a big share of his business.



The wines and liquors are stored in the wine cellar—a spacious apartment with a clean cement floor. An elevator in the warehouse at the rear of the store extends to the wine-cellar to eliminate heavy lifting. He has the exclusive agency for various liquors and even hotels have to come to him for supplies.

Little Lost in Bad Debts.

Since Mr. Osborne does a high class trade, he suffers little from poor pays. He gives credit of course but looks carefully after his books and customers.

Book-keeping in the store is the stumbling block of many merchants. Neglect to charge up goods, failure to present accounts at the proper time and a general loose system of watching the business eventually means failure.

Mr. Osborne is particularly careful in this regard and estimates that his losses last year through bad debts did not amount to more than a half of one per cent.

Advertise Consistently.

Linked with quality in goods, advertising forms the other chief selling method in the Osborne business.

Mr. Osborne buys space regularly in three daily Hamilton newspapers. He also has space in a paper in Dundas—six mile distant, and in one in Grimsby—thirteen miles away. He writes his own ads and puts his own personality into them.

He is one of those who believe in plenty of recreation and is a reputable sportsman, with lawn bowling his hobby.

Salesmanship and Advertising Inseparable Friends

That Educational Campaigns are Necessities in Selling is Universally Recognized—What Salesmanship Clearly is—Copy-Writers Take too Much for Granted—Sincerity Goes a Long Way to Holding Friends—Enthusiasm a Necessary Qualification.

By Hugh Chalmers.

THE relation of salesmanship to advertising is the closest relationship known — closer than friends; closer than a team under single yoke; closer than brothers; closer than a man and wife, as there can never be separation and divorce; all salesmanship is part advertising, and all advertising is part salesmanship; they are the twin screw engines that drive the ship of business; they are like a chemical compound, each contains the other and is itself the thing contained.

Nitrogen and glycerine each is a power alone, but when combined in the proper parts they make the most powerful explosive known. It takes knowledge to mix them and a spark to set off the mixture, but the results are tremendous.

So with salesmanship and advertising. Each is a power alone, but combine them and you have the greatest business-producing force known. It takes brains to create and combine them, and it takes nerve to touch them off, but the results are worth while.

Every ad. is a salesman; every salesman is an ad. Advertising is salesmanship plus publicity. Salesmanship is advertising plus getting the order signed.

Advertising and salesmanship are alike in that in both you are trying to influence the human mind—trying to teach people to believe in you and your goods. Advertising is teaching; so is salesmanship..

The close relationship of salesmanship to advertising is most apparent, perhaps when we get clear down to bedrock and discover the real foundation of salesmanship—of doing business successfully. The whole business world rests upon a foundation of confidence. When confidence is gone, business is gone. Individual salesmanship depends upon confidence as much as any other transaction in business. If a man has confidence in you and in your goods you can sell him. You can not make many sales where confidence is lacking. If your prospect lacks confidence in you then your entire efforts must go to building up in his mind a feeling of confidence. Now the greatest builder of confidence is publicity—advertising. Lack of confidence is usually due to ignorance. Unless you know a man well you haven't confidence in him. Unless you know a business house well you haven't confiedence in that house. The greatest foe of ignorance is publicity. The saying that "publicity corrects all abuses" is a true one. Advertising makes you acquainted with the public. It gives people knowledge about you and your goods, and konwledge is absolutely essential to confidence. Big advertising looks like big sales; it makes people familiar with you; it unconsciously creates confidence. Without a doubt, the greatest force to-day in the interest of confidence—in the interest of credit if you will—is advertising.

Advertising and salesmanship are identical in their object.

What is their object? The distribution of goods at a profit.

How can this be done? It is done by teaching. That is what advertising is—teaching. Teaching great numbers of people to believe in your goods. And that is what salesmanship is, too. But advertising conducts a public school, while salesmanship gives individual lessons.

Education Necessary.

One of the oldest chestnuts in the talk of advertising men is: "We must carry on a campaign of education." Nearly every advertising magazine you pick up you read about some one carrying on a "campaign of education." When an advertising agent is up against it for something to say to his client, he assures him, with great solemnity, that he must carry on a "campaign of education." Let us get through with this old chestnut. All advertising campaigns are campaigns of education. If they are not education, they are not advertising at all.

The object of advertising is to teach people to believe in you and your goods; to teach them to think that they have a need for your goods and to teach them to buy your goods.

And the object of a salesman when he goes into his territory is exactly the same. Judging from some of the advertising I see, and from what I know of a great many salesmen, I am convinced that neither the advertising man, nor the salesman has plainly before him the object he is trying to accomplish. Of course, a man who does accomplish an object without knowing himself the object which he is trying to accomplish is only a fortunate victim of an accident. We all know that this kind of an accident very seldom takes place.

I once learned a valuable lesson from a School of Expression in Boston. I went there because they said they could teach any one to talk in public. I do not know that I learned much about speaking in public, but I learned this one thing, which has been worth a whole lot to me ever since. The first thing that this teacher told me was that I had to have an object in mind when I was addressing an audience. He said, "Now, what is your object? What do you want to tell these people? Why are you going to talk to them? Get the object first fixed in your mind, and then talk about it, but if you get up to talk and haven't any particular object in mind, you won't make much of an impression." Now this "object" business is not only good for public speaking, but in everything we do every day. If you are going to write an advertisement, what is the object of it? If you are going to hold a meeting of 6 or 7 of your people, what is the object? If you are going to print a paper for salesmen, what is the object of it? You can see from these applications what a great point that is.

I have been in the manufacturing business nearly all my life and I have found that it is much easier to make things than it is to sell them. It took me some time to figure this out. It finally dawned on me that the difference is caused through the fact that in one case you deal mostly with machinery and metals, while in the other you deal entirely with the human mind.

Machinery is a fixed quantity. You know exactly what a machine can do and exactly what it will do under given conditions. It is very often automatic and requires little attention from anyone. It is nearly always the same. It never changes its mind. It is very seldom influenced by outside conditions. Nearly every one who has some money can start a factory and manufacture things, but it doesn't follow that any one can sell things after manufacturing.

When you get on the other side of it and try to deal with humanity, you face very different problems. Humanity thinks. It has feelings. It has sensations, decisions, prejudices. It changes its mind. It is influenced by environment and the conditions surrounding it.

Here is a peculiar thing about humanity. It has always wanted and it wants now, teachers, leaders. People are willing to be taught. The man who makes a great success, I don't care whether he is a business man, a lawyer, a politician, or an advertiser, is the one who goes into the teaching business.

Advertising and salesmanship form the connecting link between invention and the use of any article. All the best inventions of the world would have fallen flat had it not been for advertising and salesmanship—had it not been for teaching people the use of new things. Therefore, I think I will not be stating the case too strongly to say that advertising and salesmanship have done more to push the world ahead than anything else. Through advertising and salesmanship, men have been brought to see and appreciate the blessings which the world affords.

A Change of Mind.

What is salesmanship? Salesmanship is nothing more nor less than making the other fellow feel as you do about what you have to sell. A sale does not take place in a man's pocket, or in his pocket-book, or his check book, but it first takes place in his mind. In order to make a sale you must convince a man's mind. When you go in to see him he feels that he does not want to buy your goods. You feel that he should have them and would buy them if he knew as much about the goods as you do. Now, in order to sell him you must change his mind and bring it around to agree with your mind. So that when we once put salesmanship on this broad plane of convincing the other man's mind, it doesn't make any difference whether we are trying to sell a house and lot or a paper of pins.

Advertising is a process of salesmanship. It is a means toward making the other fellow feel as you do. Most frequently we hear that "advertising is salesmanship on paper." This is not untrue, and yet it is not wholly true. Advertising is more than salesmanship. It is an insurance on the continuance of trade. It is salesmanship plus publicity.

To show the value of teaching salesmen what to say to prospective purchasers—suppose you were a manufacturer and could call all of your prospective purchasers together in one large tent, and you would have them there for the purpose of telling them about your goods. What would you do? First of all you would be mighty careful about the man or men you picked out to talk to these people. You would pick out the man who could make the best talk, the man who, in the time he had to speak, could teach these people the most about your goods. You would want to know beforehand just what he was going to say before you would let him go on the platform. Now, what is the difference between talking to them one at a time? Then why not train your salesmen how to talk to each individual, since you would consider it so important to know what would be said to all of them at one time?

I believe if advertisers could get all of their readers together in one large tent, and would be able to say to these readers what they are saying to them in print, that nine-tenths of them would change their copy. If we were going to say things to people that we print, we would certainly be more careful. Yet, there are more "bad breaks" being made to-day in advertising than in most anything else. Some advertisers seem to say everything but the right thing to their prospective customers. They would not think of talking about these same things if they were talking to these people.

It is, after all, all teaching, whether it is selling goods orally or selling them through printed matter. I am not foolish enough not to know that there are exceptions to this rule. I realize that there are certain well-established concerns who print very little about their goods and merely keep their names before the public, but any one else who wishes to go into the same line of business will fail absolutely by following these same methods. The only way that any concern can hope to take away a share of the patronage of another well-established concern in the same line is to adopt different advertising and selling methods. It is necessary for the new concern to give a reason why people should change their place of trading. If a man wants to start in the hardware business, the shoe business, or any other business, it is not enough merely to put an advertisement in the paper saying that you are in the shoe business or hardware business and expect people who are buying elsewhere, and are fairly well satisfied, to change their place of trading, but in addition to stating that you are in the shoe business or the hardware business, you must give reasons why people should buy shoes or hardware from you.

Too Much for Granted.

I think more copy writers and advertisers take it for granted that the buying public knows a great deal about their goods; at least, some of the copy would make you think so. They use all kinds of technical expressions and big words. I once heard it said that a man with big ideas uses little words to express himself, while the man with little ideas is always using big words to try to impress the people with the greatness of the little idea. Small words are more important in advertising than in anything else. No one ever buys until they are convinced. You can't convince them until they understand. They won't understand unless you express yourself clearly, and the only way to express yourself clearly is to use small words that any one can understand. Most advertisers shoot over the heads of nine-tenths of the people they want to reach. They don't understand the art of merely talking common-sense to these people —the same kind of talk they would use if they were trying to sell them orally.

Next to the importance of what you say, is the way in which you say it. It is so in talking—it is so in advertising. The set-up of an advertisement is like the dress of a salesman. Suppose a salesman would go into a store to sell goods and would have on a hat of one color, a coat of another color, a vest of another, and green trousers. He might attract atention, but he would not make much of an impression. The set-ups of some advertisements remind me very much of such wearing apparel on a salesman. Of course, this is exaggerated, but nevertheless you see the point. In my opinion an advertisement must be just as simple in form as the dress of a salesman. Some people write an advertisement and then put a lot of red lines or heavy black lines around it, or all kinds of curly-cues, so that the most important thing about the "ad" is the big red lines, or the fancy type or the fancy border, when, as a matter of fact, that is the very thing they want to subdue. Everything must be so arranged and the type so set that the attention is called to the most important thing and that is the statements you are making in the copy about the goods you want to sell. Everything must be subordinated to that.

Another thing in connection with copy: I think that all self-evident things should be omitted, such as "Are you in business to make money?" "Are you satisfied with what you made last year?"—and a number of similar clauses, all of which are foolish, and it is foolish to waste time talking about things that are self-evident. Of course the man is in business to make money and of course he is not satisfied with what he made last year if he can make more this year. Don't waste time on non-essential things.

I have always claimed that all you can hope to do is to get a man to read the first five or six lines of your copy, and if the first five or six lines are not interesting enough to cause him to read the balance, the fault is yours. He gave you the chance but you did not take advantage of it. To prove this—one time we sent out one thousand circular letters, and they were all mailed under a one-cent stamp, and to show you that nearly all of these people opened the letter and read the first few lines, would say that this circular was asking for prices on the goods which the man handled, and out of the 1,000 letters mailed out, nearly 900 people replied by giving prices, which showed that nearly nine-tenths of these people received the letter under the one-cent stamp, opened it and read the first few lines of it, because nearly 900 of them quoted prices. This convinced me that much depends on the opening lines of any copy. It is the same thing in a personal interview. You are impressed by what the man tells you at the start. Let's eliminate all the "by-the-ways" in advertising. Talk straight business.

I once went in to see an old business man and wanted to borrow $500. I went in and said: "I want to borrow $500, and will give you my note for 60 days and I will pay you at the end of 60 days." He turned to the cashier and said: "Write Mr. Chalmers a cheque for $500." He then said to me: "Young man, let me tell you something—you could not have gotten that money had it not been for the straightforward way you asked for it. Most men come in here and waste a lot of time by saying, 'Good morning, how are you this morning? Nice weather we have been having the last few days. How is the family? And, by the way, I am a little short of money and would like to borrow $500 for a couple of months.' "But," he said, "I was impressed by the way you asked for it. You came in and asked me for the money right off, so I am going to let you have it." So, gentlemen, in this time and generation, let's eliminate all the "by-the-ways" and get down to straight business. It pays.

Science in Writing Copy.

Now there is a lesson in that for advertisers, too. This is a busy world and getting busier all the time. Even those who have lots of time to read like to read direct statements. So get down to talking your business in the opening paragraphs of your copy.

I have had a great deal to do with salesmen. I was a salesman myself for a great many years, and I have employed and supervised the work if hundreds of others. There is an old adage which says "Salesmen are born and not made." I don't believe that. I believe that salesmen are made as well as born, and teaching will do a great deal to make a salesman. However, there are ten qualities which a man must possess to be a successful salesman, and as far as my experience goes, I should say that these principal qualities are Health, Honesty, Ability, Initiative, Knowledge of the Business, Tact, Sincerity, Industry, Open-mindedness, and Enthusiasm. I think these same qualities may be applied to advertising men, or, as a matter of fact, to any man, because, when you get right down to the facts, we are all salesmen. Every man is trying to sell his personality to some other man. He is trying to impress the people he meets. He wants people to think well of him; consequently he is a salesman, because he is trying to sell his good qualities to other people. A man may not have all ten of these qualities, but in proportion as he has them will he succeed.

Now, when I say that he should have health, I do not mean that you want to go to the extreme of interfering with a man's private life and tell him what he should eat or drink, or anything of that kind, but I believe that in the selection of men the question of health should enter largely, because, in my own experience, a healthy mind is better nourished in a healthy body that otherwise. The man who has health of body is surer to have a healthy mind than the one who hasn't bodily health. On the question of the health of a salesman enter those things he shouldn't do. There is hardly a salesman in the country today but isn't doing one or two things that are injuring him. The greatest thing that bothers us all is our habits. I refer particularly to the subject of eating, drinking and smoking too much.

A salesman's mind should be on the qui vive all the time. Just like a race horse, he should be ready to go when the bell sounds. Now, every man knows that he is better off if he doesn't drink at all. I don't think that drinking ever benefited any man, and the same thing applies to smoking, but there are some of us that can do these things temperately and who are not much harmed by it. But if a man wants to take a drink or two, he should not do it in the day-time. A business man particularly should not take a drink until after six o'clock in the evening. We see very much less drinking in the day-time now than ten years ago, and I am very glad to see it, because, as business men, we have no right to do that thing in the middle of the business day which will in any way interfere with our efficiency for our afternoon's work. I know of nothing that will so unfit a man for business as a drink or two in the middle of the day, because at two or three o'clock in the afternoon he is lazy and heavy and unfit for work, and a salesman, above all others, if he feels he must drink, should not take a drink until after six o'clock at night. The man who will stick to this rule will have more dollars in the bank at the end of the year than the man who does not. I speak from experience, like the man who says, "It pays to be honest, because I have tried both ways."

Honesty Must Rule.

In speaking of honesty, I don't refer to it in its basest sense, because a man is nothing short of a fool nowadays who is not absolutely honest. But honesty goes further than just what a man does. Honesty means what a man thinks as well as what he does. After all, gentlemen, there is only one man in the world who knows whether a man is honest, and that is himself. Our wives think that we are honest, and whether we are or not it is a good thing to keep them thinking that way, but they could not prove it to save their souls, but I give it to you as good sense and business logic that honesty in all things must be the rule of all men if they are going to succeed. I will tell you that it is a good thing that some men are dishonest, because if they were honest, coupled with their natural ability, you and I wouldn't have much of a chance.

In regard to ability; I have found in my limited experience that most men have two arms, two eyes, two ears, a nose and a mouth, and considering their height, they weigh about the same. Now what makes the difference between one man and another? Nothing but brain power. That's all. One man has developed his brains further than another. If all men were created equal in brain power they would not remain that way. You remember the parable of the talents? Some of us are so afraid that what we have will get away from us that we wrap it up in a napkin and keep it, and we have that talent always, but we never add to it.

It has been my experience that there are but three kinds of men in the world—the kind you have to tell once to do a thing, and you can bet your life it will be done; the second is the kind that you have to tell three or four times, and the third is that great business-producing, creative lot of men who don't have to be told. They know what to do and they go ahead and do it. Dewey had initiative when he cut the cable at Manila, because he was on the ground and knew better what to do than the men at Washington did. What we call skill in a surgeon is initiative in a business man. If a surgeon had you on a table and had operated on you for appendicitis, and found he had made a mistake, and some other condition existed, he hasn't time to go and take a book from a shelf and say, "I will read up on this subject." No, he has to go ahead and finish the job, whether it is your finish or his finish. They call that skill in a surgeon, but it is initiative in a business man, because he must face critical situations, he must face untried problems and must solve them for himself. He must do something. I am more thankful every day that I live in a country where men have an equal chance, where poverty is no barrier to progress, but, in many, many cases, is a positive help, because it is only by learning to overcome the obstacles of our youth that we are taught to do things and know things, and are taught the value of a dollar, that we learn to overcome our troubles in business and are able to solve the knotty problems that confront every business man.

Salesmanship a Profession.

On the question of knowledge of the business, I have always noticed that the lawyer who reads the most law books and keeps up to date on law, is, as a rule, the best lawyer. I know the statement that "salesmanship is a profession" is worn threadbare, but it is true, nevertheless. A man ought to have all the knowledge of his business that he can possess, keeping in mind the old saying that "knowledge is power."

I remember once of being in Germany, at a salesmen's convention, and there was one man there who had been banner agent for three years in succession. In awarding him the prize at this convention I asked him to tell the other agents why he had led all the rest for three years. He could not have answered better if he had talked a day, and yet, he answered in practically one sentence, when he said: "I defy anybody in all Germany to ask me a question about my business that I cannot answer." That was the great secret of his success.

Tact is that rare quality which enables a man to know how to deal with his fellow men. Tact is something it is pretty hard to give a man. He must cultivate it himself. Some people mistake tact for "jolly." A man who can "jolly" you into something isn't always tactful; he is merely expedient. He has done the most expedient thing at the time, perhaps, but he probably hasn't been honest with you. So don't mistake the thing. Tact would not jump out of a window unless he saw a soft pillow at the bottom. It is pretty hard to describe it, but we all know that tact is a great quality to possess.

Sincerity is that rare quality which not only makes friends, but holds them. You can tell from the way men talk whether they are sincere or not. Men are affected by everything you say and do. You know that throwing thoughts at a man is nothing more or less than throwing something tangible at him. Now, gentlemen, I claim it is impossible to throw insincere thoughts at a man and have him catch sincere thoughts. I say it is just as impossible to do this as it is impossible for me to throw a cup at a man and have him catch a saucer. If he catches anything he will catch the cup, and I say that men are unconsciously affected by the sincerity or insincerity of the man they are dealing with; so I believe in being sincere in all things. Insincerity has taken a few orders, but insincerity never held a job long. I admire a sincere man, and so do you. I hate the jollier. It is your friend who criticizes you and your enemy who flatters you. Your friend is sincere, wants you to improve and tells you where you are wrong, and the man who tells you that you are the best fellow on earth when you are doing wrong, isn't your friend, because he is encouraging you to do things that are not right. Therefore, accept criticism that way, because it is your friend.

As regards industry, I think the man who coined that sentence "always on the job" did a good day's work, because industry is a great thing. Keep busy! Keep doing your work right!

Open-mindedness is the willingness to take suggestions. The man who knows it all is standing on a banana peel placed there by the fool-killer, who is waiting just around the corner. The man who is not open-minded will get into a rut, and, after all, gentlemen, the only difference between a rut and a grave is the width and the depth. We should be all willing to receive suggesions. The day is not long past when salesmen used to resent suggestion. Most salesmen accept them nowadays. I have heard of cases where men have made suggestions to a superintendent and he has told hem that that was his business and has gone so far as to "fire" them for interference. The man who is doing the work every day is the man who is best able to tell you how to improve it. I would just as soon be stopped by a janitor as by a general manager, because the chances are ten to one that the janitor knows more about the things he wants to tell me than the general manager does. So I say that if we are to progress we should solicit and gladly receive suggestions.

Lack of Enthusiasm.

As to enthusiasm, a man might have honesty, health, ability, knowledge of the business, tact, sincerity, industry, and open-mindedness, and without enthusiasm he would only be a statue. Enthusiasm is the white heat that fuses all of these qualities into one effective mass. To illustrate enthusiasm. I can take a sapphire and a piece of plain blue glass, and I can rub the plain glass until it has a surface as hard as the sapphire, but when I put the two together and I look down into them, I find that the sapphire has a thousand little lights glittering out of it that you can't get out of the blue glass if you rub a thousand years. What those little lights are to the sapphire, enthusiasm is to a man. I love to see enthusiasm. A man should be enthusiastic about that in which he is interested. I like to go to a ball game and hear a man "root" for the home team, and it never bothers me a bit, because I know that that man has enthusiasm. He has interest. I would not give two cents for a man who works for money alone. The man who doesn't get some comfort and some enthusiasm out of his daily work is in a bad way. Some men are almost irresistible—you know that; it is because enthusiasm radiates from their expressions, beams from their eyes and is evident in their actions. Enthusiasm is that thing which makes a man boil over for his business, for his family, or for anything he has any interest in, for anything his heart is in. So I say, enthusiasm is one of the greatest things a man can have.

The man who handles other men will succeed just in proportion as he keeps his mind on the important things he has to do. In conclusion I want to give you a suggestion as to what I have done for many years to keep my mind on the most important things. I keep before me at all times the ten most important things, and I have these in a folder on my desk, and as the things are attended to they are marked off and my secretary keeps making a clean sheet of the ten most important things, because I only want to keep my mind on important things. Transfer to some one else the details, because we men who handle other men succeed just in proportion as we can intelligently direct their efforts. The actual work we do ourselves doesn't amount to anything; it is what we can succeed in getting others to do that counts.

I might illustrate this by a homely story: Suppose a farmer had a 40-acre corn field, and he had a helper named John, and he would say: "John, go chase the pigs out of the corn field." John might chase pigs for a week and never know when he had got them all out, because he doesn't know how many are in there. But suppose this farmer should say: "John, there are ten pigs in that corn field, go get them out." After John had got out ten, he would no longer be chasing pigs that didn't exist. This same thing applies to us as business men. If we keep before us the ten most important things we have to do, we are sure that we are not chasing things that do not exist. Train your mind to do this. If I should ask almost any business man "What are the ten most important things you have to do?" he will have to scratch his head and think. Now, if he doesn't know what the ten most important things in his business are how can he be sure that he is working on these important things?

Best Business in the World.

I consider that advertising is the greatest business in the world, viewed from many standpoints. In the first place, there is perhaps more money spent on advertising to-day than on nearly anything else you can think of, and yet it requires more skill and more care in the spending of it than almost anything else connected with business. It seems to me that an advertising man has a right to feel very proud of his profession, which calls for talent and ingenuity on the part of those who practise it, but more especially because it is the profession which is doing more than any other, I believe, to solve the world's biggest problems. The world's biggest problem is the problem of distribution—the getting of things from where they are to where they ought to be. It is the business of the advertising man to find markets; to create demand, and to cut down cost to the consumer or increase the profits of the manufacturer as the case may be, through lessening selling expense. It is really wonderful when you stop to think of the influence which an advertising man con wield and the opportunity for service to his employer and to the public which is his; a good salesman is permitted to talk to one person at a time, or at best a half dozen persons perhaps, but a good advertising man has the privilege of talking to millions at one time.

THE HOPELESS DRUMMER.

By Strickland W. Gillilan.

He lay upon his dying bed,
The valiant knight of grip and trip,
He knew that ere the day was fled,
He'd sign his final mileage strip.

A light shone in his blazing eye—
A flame of bliss without alloy;
He'd bid this weary world goodbye
With unadulterated joy.

A clergyman whose office gave
The right to mix in such affairs,
Came softly in, with features grave,
To offer benison and prayers.

"Where," thus the minister began,
"Do you expect to go from hence?"
The drummer eyed that preacher man
As though he'd given grave offense.

"Where do I go?" he cried in grief,
"Where shall I go from here?" you ask
"I thought that death would bring relied
From this eternal hiking task.

"But if 'tis just another case
Of going somewhere, you can bet
The ills I'm toughened to I'll bear
For several busy seasons yet!"

So saying, he arose and dressed;
He rearranged his sample case.
He'd hoped to gain a good long rest,
Not just a chance to "go some place."

One Time Collar Maker Makes Good in Groceries

Peterboro Merchant Used to Follow Former Trade, While Partner Managed the Business—Left the Collar for the Count er and by Diligent Work and Progressive Methods is Building up a Good Business—Cash Discounts Help Considerably —Speaks to Every Customer Who Enters the Store.

Working at his trade as a collar maker for four years while joint proprietor of a grocery store ; taking charge of the helm himself in 1905 and last year doing a business of $23,000—that in brief is the laconic history of the business career of Geo. A. Goheen, one of the leading merchants of Peterboro, Ont., up to the present time.

The attributes to his success might be summed up in the following paragraphs :

Service—seeing and speaking to every customer who enters the store.

Buying for cash and getting the benefit of all discounts.

Buying as closely as possible whenever possible.

Watching credit customers carefully.

Purchasing only No. 1 goods.

Using a cash register—operated by electricity.

Taking clerks into his confidence.

In 1901 Mr. Goheen began business in Peterboro and in partnership with C. S. Curran. The latter managed the business while Mr. Goheen worked at his trade—that of a collar maker, and a first-class one at that.

Four years later, in 1905, Mr. Curran retired from the business and Mr. Goheen forsook the needle and the collar and confined his energies to the business of which he had been an "associate" but not an "active member" for the four years previous.

He assumed the reins and by his industry and natural business abilities soon elevated his business to a higher plane. In one year's time, the large increase in trade made it necessary for the proprietor to secure larger premises. So plans were prepared and the contract let for the erection of the present establishment, 40 feet by 40 feet in dimensions. Mr. Goheen moved into the new store in October, 1906.

His place of business is some distance from the main centre although not by any means on the outskirts of the city. It is between the two in a splendid residential section. Not only does he handle groceries but many other lines, including flour and feed, tinware, boots and shoes, fruit, chinaware and confectionery.

Has Faith in His Clerks.

He began business with only one clerk and now he has a staff of five and sometimes one or two extra are necessary on Saturdays and other busy days. Mr. Goheen is a student of the clerk question. He treats his employes courteously and teaches them all about the stock he handles, and in fact takes them into his confidence in regard to invoices and business dealings. He believes that in order to give the best results, they should become acquainted as much as possible with the details of the business.

By his own example, he teaches his clerks the value of service. He makes it a point to see and speak to every customer who enters the store, while he is there. He wants to become personally acquainted with all who deal with him. Customers appreciate this consideration. When they see that a merchant takes an interest in them and tries to give them the best possible service, they take a greater interest in him and in his store. A lady very often has a favorite clerk with whom she always likes to deal, but nevertheless if the proprietor of the business acts as if she were not there she would likely resent the inattention and possibly decline to trade further with him.

Mr. Goheen's method is proof against this. He sees to it that no customer receives inattention and in this way provides a good sound means of "holding what he has" in addition to his methods of reaching out for more.

The Discount Counts Up.

Buying is said to be one of the paramount features in the operation of a retail business. An unsuccessful buyer —one who pays more than he should or buys without taking advantage of the cash discounts—cannot very well make rapid headway.

Mr. Goheen makes it a point to save all he can from discounts. No account is allowed to run beyond the alloted time, so that with this practically "found" money, he has a sure and easy means of increasing his profits. When he began in 1901, the turn over was about $75 per week, an average of $3,800 per year ; last year it was over $23,000, and the discounts helped considerably.

Mr. Goheen only deals in reliable goods—those with quality. He finds that by so doing his customers have little grounds for complaint and he has much greater satisfaction. He does a mixed cash and credit business, but in the latter case he looks carefully after the doubtful ones. This is where too many merchants lose. In their mad rush for trade practically every individual is given credit—but this principle is wrong.

In one day the Goheen staff has waited on as many as 400 customers. The cash register shows it and, by the way, Mr. Goheen claims to be the possessor of the only electrically operated cash register in Peterboro. His store equipment is up to date.

Taking these facts into consideration, is it any wonder the business has gone and is yet going forward ? Mr. Goheen is contemplating adding still more room to his establishment in order to take in other lines and to extend his business still further.

The Benefits of a Retail Grocers' Association

Cause of Many Failures is From Ignorance of Merchants Regarding Expense of Doing Business—Organizations Necessary for Educational Purposes—Different Kinds of Price-cutters and Their Follies—Equitable Division of Profits.

By J. J. Higgins—Address to B. C. Retail Grocers' Association.

We have been taught after 6,000 years the dearly bought lesson of experience that there is strength in association. The spirit of the old times was to raise barriers to keep people apart ; the spirit of this, the twentieth century is to break down divisions and bring the people together. All that tends to divide and separate us is destructive. Therefore the work of the association is constructive. We try to join together. The great railroad and steamship lines have mastered this lesson. The railroads fight over terminals and rights-of-way just as bitterly as ever. But when it comes to freight and passenger rates, we find them sitting around the same table discussing means and methods to avoid establishing figures that will spell ruin. What is true of these interests is true of the great steel corporations, large banking interests, and practically all manufacturing, professional and labor interests. Selfishness can be truly credited with creating all present afflictions of the grocery business, and the admitted necessity of curing them has forced upon us, the association, to study out and apply the remedies. Just as a counsel of able physicians, lawyers or statesmen is called in critical physical, legal or national difficulties. In order to pass intelligently upon our difficulties and apply our remedies with a fair regard not only to our interests, but those we patronize and that more important body, the great mass of the consumers.

The consumers are our patrons, hence our very best friends. No honorable grocer would try to take advantage of his friends ; nor would it be profitable to do so. In our deliberations we must constantly keep before us the interests they are fairly and honestly entitled to have protected. They are sensible enough to realize that as grocers we are spending our time and money to serve their convenience and necessity and that we are as such entitled to a fair remuneration for the service rendered as is the carpenter who builds their house or the doctor who ministers to their illness, and those of them who are just and honest don't resent any fair and legal means taken to get that remuneration.

Expense of Doing Business.

The fair, and wise customer has no quarrel with the association. If he be observing he learns that grocers who make a habit of cutting prices are divided into classes : The first class is made up of the fools who don't know what it costs to do business, who think that every time they sell for $1 an article which costs them ninety cents, they are making ten cents (forgetting the fact that it costs an average of ten per cent. to do business in a retail way), and who, therefore, fix a scale of prices which must inevitably result in a failure or a heavy loss on their business venture. The customer who is controlled by his sense of justice, and not his greed, does not want to prosper by his folly of others and he will not resent a change which will prevent his profiting at the expense of a continual loss to a large and necessary class of business men.

The second class of price cutters is made up of those who know what their goods cost them, but who cut prices and accept an ostensible loss with the deliberate intention of making a real profit by selling inferior goods and giving short weight and measure.

To the consumer then the above order of things sums itself up as follows: With unrestrained and cut-throat competition he must either be deceived, be cheated or profit at the expense of a loss to a very necessary class pf public servants.

The association attempts to do more, and can do more than to partially protect the honest and careful business man against the knavery of his associates. In protecting him it helps to protect the consumers, who, therefore should welcome it as a healthful and not a vicious manifestation of the modern economic tendency toward otherwise unprotected classes in society, as in fact a trades union in business.

Association's Objects.

The object of the association is not to fix or raise prices to the consumer, but to secure an equitable division of the proper and just price and to have each article carry its fair proportion of margin ; to concentrate and consolidate the efforts of our members in the betterment of trade conditions ; to act intelligently in promoting good legislation and combating that which is bad, to wage a retailers' war against dishonesty and faulty methods and to propagate association ideas. This is the only safe, sane and honest course we can pursue.

So this hydra-headed monster of a combine which undertakes to help you and make an honest and decent living from our business and secure for us reforms and laws which can be obtained only by co-operation is not such a terrible thing after all. We do not belong to a secret organization whose workings we need conceal from any one. We ask any fair-minded customer, member of the press, or impartial committee to examine the wholesale quotations upon all articles sold by the retail grocer and then add 15 per cent. for operating expenses and 3 per cent. for interest and risks and then figure out, if they can, any semblance to a trust or combine among grocers. This is true and I defy any honest person or committee to disprove. Why then should our objects and motives be impugned ? Do not understand me to say that we should espouse a policy which would prevent competition. The old saw that competition is the life of trade still remains true in all its essentials. So far as competition means keen rivalry to sell clean goods of good quality at honest weights and reasonable prices, to display them in an effective manner and to deliver them promptly, to treat customers with courtesy and serve their convenience with diligence and skill, let us have more of it and yet more. But reckless and indiscriminate price cutting is not competition. It is plain business suicide. It results in inevitable ruin to the merchant and in no permanent benefit to the consumer, and it should be stopped.

Experience has demonstrated that under modern conditions the retail grocery business is peculiarly and increasingly exposed to unreasonable and wasteful price-cutting. That evil is almost wholly responsible for the appalling percentage of failures in the grocery business, a rate of business mortality higher than that in any other line of trade. A commercial system which results in the failure of seventy-seven out of every one-hundred grocers engaged in business, as shown by the report of Bradstreet and Dun, is fundamentally wrong, and cannot long endure. The public has no right to profit at the expense of a continual and ruinous loss to a large and necessary class of business men.

The Place of The Grocer.

The grocer spends his time, his labor, and his money to serve the convenience and necessities of his customers. He is an essential part of the business world, and is as much a producer as the farmer or mechanic. He is, therefore, as much entitled to a fair remuneration for the services he renders as any other class of business, professional, or laboring men. It is the business of the association, and its most important business, to decide upon an honorable and fair means to help him to secure that remuneration.

In discussing this matter, some six years ago at San Francisco, I said that no one was in a better or more logical position to see that we got a square deal than was the manufacturer, and upon him should the greater burden rest. The manufacturer nearly always has in view the price at which he wants his product to reach the consumer, and in marketing it he seeks, or should seek, to see that the difference between the actual manufacturing cost and the retail price he has set against it is equitably divided according to the services rendered, and that the price is strictly maintained. Such a policy, honestly carried out, would work no hardship upon anyone, but would fairly reimburse everyone connected with the distribution of his product, and would, therefore, guarantee a square deal to the consumer and benefit the manufacturer through the resultant enthusiasm of the distributors.

Sample Room Idea Where Orders Are Taken

New Plan for Giving Better Service in the Grocery Department of a Quebec City Store—Total Order Given to One Special Clerk in Order to Save Time—Same Company Has a Moving Picture Show—Free Tickets Given With Dollar Purchases.

A sample room in which samples of every article is exhibited is the feature in the grocery department of The Paquet Company, Quebec city.

It is situated in the centre of the grocery department, and is equipped with two small tables and chairs. A special clerk is detailed to look after this "samples room", and to take orders from any customers who may wish to save time by giving their whole order to one clerk.

The company find the plan very satisfactory and economical, as it enables them to keep special clerks at their proper duties, that is, one to sell biscuits, one to sell tea and coffee, one bacon, one candies, one canned goods, etc., and this avoids the confusion which they claim often results from the practice of certain clerks having their lists of favorite customers, and taking these customers all around the grocery floor to show them goods and take their orders.

The enclosure is fifteen feet square, surrounded by mirrors 3 feet 6 inches in height. With samples of all kinds of grocery articles arranged on the graded shelving which is covered with white oilcloth, the lady-shopper may sit down by the table and order from these samples any goods she may desire. It therefore also becomes a rest room for the accommodation and convenience of customers and is valuable because it indicates that the Paquet Company desires to give efficient service.

A card bearing the notice: "Your entire order for groceries will be taken here if you do not wish to use a transfer card," is prominently displayed on the outside of the mirrored enclosure.

Give Away Free Tickets.

Another important feature to the Paquet store is what is called the "Paquetorium." This is a theatorium or five cent moving picture show where one can spend a half hour or so while shopping. The Paquetorium has proven a success. Every picture shown is examined and passed upon by a strict board of censors before the public is admitted. The programme is changed three times a week, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Music is provided with the aid of an autopiano.

The general admission to the "Paquetorium" is 5 cents, the hours being from 9.30 to 11.30 a.m., from 2.30 to 5.30 in the afternoons and from 7.30 to 10 o'clock on Saturday evenings.

Every purchaser, however, of groceries to the value of $1 is entitled to a free ticket and for each extra dollar purchase an extra free ticket is given. This is practically the same as five per cent. discount to those who appreciate a good moving picture show.

Do you realize the value of enthusiasm?

Lack of it may be the one thing that holds you back from the fullest success in your life.

Enthusiasm is the power that drives our mental machinery. It is the force that brings things to pass. The derivation of the word is interesting. The original idea is the presence of God in a man. So when you are enthusiastic you may consider yourself inspired.

Enthusiasm is something that can be developed. Fall in love with your work and you cannot help becoming enthusiastic.

When Necessity is Boss Much Can Be Accomplished

Story of How a General Merchant in a Country District Built His Own Store —Dug the Foundation, Was Brick-layer, Stone-mason, Carpenter and Clerk—He Even Painted His Own Signs and Built His Own Delivery Sleigh—Began Without Capital—A Remarkable Career.

"I was the workman but necessity was the boss."

This brief statement is a very significant one in referring to the business career of P. G. Towns, a general merchant at Douro, Peterboro County, Ont.

Douro cannot be called a village. It consists of Mr. Town's general store, a church, a blacksmith shop and several other structures, particularly residential.

But the peculiar part about the business of P. G. Towns is that the establishment as shown by the accompanying reproduction is all the proprietor's handiwork. There are certainly few stores of such a size and character in the country that can possess such a claim. From the cellar to garret—everything was constructed by Mr. Towns.

P. G. TOWNS,
A Country Merchant Who Has Had a Remarkable Career.

Moreover he is a man who began his business career without capital, and in the face of such a condition of affairs his progress has been remarkable.

In recalling to mind the difficulties which stood in his way in earlier days, Mr. Towns provides an interesting narrative.

Six Months to Get Out.

"I started business," he said, "without capital, 15 years ago at the age of 21; it was a very small building, which I rented by the month. At the end of a year and a half, when I had worked up a fair business, considering the amount of stock I was able to carry, the building in which I was doing business was sold, and I got six months to get out.

"I bought a lot next to my old stand and not having money, I decided to make work take the place of capital. I started work as soon as the spring opened, in spite of the advice of my friends, who believed I would never be able to do it as I had no experience at any trade.

Was His Own Clerk, Too.

"I undertook to build the principal part of the store, 24 x 30 ft., which I completed before fall. Through the summer I was very busy as I was also my own clerk in the store.

"I planned my own work, was my own carpenter, stone-mason, bricklayer, painter, etc.

"Each day during the summer my hours were from 19 to 20 long; but they seemed very short to me because my mind was taken up wholly with the work and I was determined to complete it in spite of all difficulties.

Prints His Own Signs.

"Each year since, I have made an addition to my store and increased my stock, the work being all done by myself. The size of the present store and dwelling is 48x70 ft. The stable and sheds on the premises, which cover an area of about 24x60, have been also built by my own hands, and I have also done the printing on the front of the store. The set of sleighs which I built fifteen years ago, when I started in business, serve me faithfully each winter yet."

Mr. Towns planned his own business methods and he is proud of the fact that he "never tasted any intoxicating liquor of any description" in his life.

Buys From Customer's Stand-point.

Fifteen years experience among the same people has provided him with good sense in buying. He studies what this customers want and buys the goods that will be satisfactory to them.

He handles all lines of goods that are kept in a general store, but he never recommends any to a customer which he believes will not altogether suit that customer.

"If he is a new customer," Mr. Towns maintains, "I wish him to call again; and if he is an old one I want to hold him."

False representations as to the value of goods is therefore steered clear of.

His trade is purely a country one and he buys a large quantity of eggs, poultry and other farm produce.

A Country Store, Every Portion of Whi ch was Built by the Proprietor, P. G. To wns.

Good Tea Salesman.

He has the record of taking orders and delivering $700 worth of tea inside of thirty days, one time when he canvassed the neighboring. He is a firm believer that work and perseverence are good business capital—and he certainly has every reason to have faith in them when he looks back on his own business life. He is the post-master at Douro and treasurer of Douro township.

From the above it will be seen that Mr. Towns has had a unique career. A lack of capital did not daunt him. He had the use of his physical energies and by applying his intellectual faculties in his younger days he is now in a position to settle down and enjoy a smooth business.

When "necessity is the boss" much can be done.

OPEN BOXES CAREFULLY.

What do you do with empty boxes, packing cases and barrels in which your goods come to you from the jobber?

A large number of retail grocers, appreciating the amount of money invested in these receptacles, make it a point to save them and find that they have no difficulty in selling them back to their jobber at 5c apiece or more, according to the size and character of the box or barrel.

Others, says a retail grocer, apparently feel that it is too much trouble to pay any attention to this small item and after permitting the clerks to practically spoil them in opening the cases, relegate them to a junk pile in the rear of the store, where they are either permitted to be carried away for firewood or remain an unsightly monument to the merchant's indifference to small leaks.

If you have never given this subject any attention, begin now to have each box and barrel opened up without being damaged, see that the lids are replaced and if the jobber from whom you buy is not located in your city, you will probably find little difficulty in locating some concern in your home town that is paying considerable money for boxes in which to ship its goods and who will welcome the opportunity of taking all you have available off your hands at regular periods.

SEND ALONG THE PHOTOGRAPH.

If you have a good display window have it photographed; you will find the suggestions of advantage to you later. If the photograph is a good one, send it to The Canadian Grocer for reproduction; we will bear the expense of having a cut made. Let others know of your enterprise and be of mutual assistance to one another.

Custom Goes to Store With the Attractive Front

Appearance Counts a Lot in Purchasing—Good Example in the Dion Store, Valleyfield, Quebec—Success of the Proprietor, Who Began With Capital of $40 — Some of His Business Methods.

No better example of an attractive and commanding store-front can be had than the store of E. Dion, Valleyfield, Que. Standing three storeys in height, with a large dome and several other ornaments in the top, it at once draws attention and indicates prosperity.

More attention should be given to store fronts by merchants than is done at the present time. Most people like beauty, and, if they can at all afford it, they will go to the attractive place every time. A neat front, when once erected, stands as a good advertisement without any extra expense. It draws custom and assists in booming the business.

The business of E. Dion in Valleyfield has been attended with splendid results. He opened a grocery store there forty-seven years ago with $40 capital, and is to-day said to be worth $140,000, and the proportions to which his enterprise has expanded are best represented by a large, modern department store. Mr. Dion is now eighty years of age and still devotes himself closely to his business.

The advertising of the Dion store is conducted along up-to-date lines. It is not confined to the regular half-page space in the weekly paper, but has systematic application to the entire county. During January and July special discount sales are held, and bargain sales in June and December. Ten per cent. extra is charged on all credit purchases and interest after 30 days. Price tickets are used throughout the store and in the windows. One of the most interesting sales held by the store was that in which $100 was given to the party bringing in the largest amount of cash slips at the end of the sale, and to those in the running, clothing, etc., to the value of $150 were given.

The store is finished throughout in golden oak and is particularly well equipped. Thirty clerks are employed.

The Establishment of Food Standards for Canada

A New Departure Intended to Insure Honest Goods to the Distributor and Consumer—List of Standards Drawn up but Manufacturers Want to Study Them Before They Become Law—Different Phases to the Food Question—Standards are Badly Needed.

Food Standards for Canada are at last apparently a reality. Chief Analyst A. McGill, of the Dominion Government, has had printed a few copies of the proposed new law governing the standard of the foods that are sold over the counter of the grocery store. These copies have been sent to only a limited number of manufacturers and as yet the average retailer knows little or nothing of what is in store for him when the measure becomes law.

The Canadian Grocer was the first medium through which any imtimation of the establishing of Food Standards was communicated to the trade. In its issue of June 18th, 1909, it contained a brief resume of the objects of the Food Standards and pointed out at the time that the Chief Analyst was working on them.

Undoubtedly something is necessary to be done along these lines. Hitherto the retail trade and the general public have been imposed upon by some manufacturers of articles of food, claiming—in some cases in a negative sense—that their goods were pure when they were not. It is plain to anyone that in such cases the dishonest manufacturer had a decided advantage over his honest competitor. He would be in a position to sell his goods cheaper because of adulterations and at the same time have extra advantage by talking pure goods through his salesmen.

With such conditions existing the consuming public is certainly taken an advantage of and in many cases the retailer as well. There are, of course, dishonest retailers among the trade and they themselves have been to blame very often. But if the new Food Standards are put into force manufacturers will be placed to a large extent on an even plane with one another. The idea of the Inland Revenue Department in making this move was undoubtedly for the purpose of protecting the honest manufacturer and dealer and the consumer.

Caution is Needed.

While the manufacturers who turn out honest goods are in favor of some sort of Food Standards being established, they agree that the authorities should proceed with them slowly. This was the substance of many interviews given by manufacturers to The Canadian Grocer.

"It's time we had them long ago" was a common opinion, but at the same time all recognized the seriousness of the step and advised that a good deal of thought be expended before the new laws were placed on the statutes. Practical advice they maintained was needed by men who were experts in the manufacture of various foods. No radical change should be made without sufficient notice being given to the men affected. "What is needed is fair treatment to all," as one manufacturer expressed it.

Unsatisfactory Conditions.

The present law with respect to foods is that which is defined by the Adulteration Act. This makes it unlawful for the manufacturer of any food-stuffs to make a compound article without so designating it on the label a mixture or compound. Adulterated foods are therefore permitted at the present time—with the "mixture" stipulation which has too often been neglected. The great trouble has been that even if manufacturers were found by food inspectors to be unlawfully adulterating foods, practically the only punishment was that the analysis of the product was published in the pamphlet sent out by the Inland Revenue department. This has no circulation among the retail trade or consuming public, so that only a very few knew anything about the quality of the goods. The samples are collected from the retailers and often they were fined. The jobber or manufacturer from whom they purchase the goods is usually anxious to pay any fine that may have been imposed upon the retailer in order to retain his trade. Only in cases where someone refuses to pay the fine, does the case come before the courts, in which event it may find its way to the public newspaper. Therefore, up to the present time the honest manufacturer has not had much of a chance to meet the unfair competition of his competitor.

The new Food Standards are for the purpose of alleviating this condition of affairs, but devising them to meet with the approval of all is an impossibility. Chief Analyst McGill, however, is consulting with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Food Products Section, and it may be that some changes will be made from the present reading of the Food Standards.

It was the intention of the analyst that they should come into force with the beginning of next year but the Manufacturers' Association disapprove of this, claiming that its members have had practically no opportunity of studying the conditions which certainly need more than an hour's perusal. The Food Products Section intends holding a meeting in the near future to talk over the situation and they will ask Mr. McGill to delay the enforcement of the measure till at least the beginning of 1911.

Brief Resume of the Act.

A first glance at the measure as it looks on paper impresses one with the idea that it is one of great length. It could scarcely be otherwise as it must necessarily take in every article which we call a food and defines in what condition that food must be or what it must contain in order that it come up to the set standard.

It is first divided into four large sections, viz.: Animal products, vegetable products, salt, Preservatives and coloring matters.

Each of these are subdivided, the first into: A.—Meats and the principal meat products and B.—Milk and its products.

"Meats and the principal meat products" is again divided into: A.—meats; B.—manufacturer meats; C.—meat extracts, meat peptones, gelatin, etc., and D.—lard, and so on with the others.

The standard set for meat for instance is as follows: "Meat, flesh, is any clean, sound, dressed and properly prepared edible part of animals in good health at the time of slaughter, and if it bear a name descriptive of its kind, composition or origin, it corresponds thereto. The term 'animals,' as herein used, includes not only mammals, but fish, fowls, crustaceans, mollusks, and all other animals used as food."

It is not our intention just now to go into details of every one of the articles mentioned. Space would not permit that and the above in reference to meat is merely an idea of what the new measure will mean.

Similarly it goes on to tell to what standards fresh-meat, cold-storage, salted, pickled and smoked meats must measure. Oysters are mentioned here with the note that the "definition is under consideration."

Among the manufactured meats are included, sausage, blood sausage, canned, corned and potted meat, meat loaf and mince meat. Standards are also set for meat extract, fluid meat, bone extract, fluid bone, meat juice, peptones, and gelation with certain percentages given.

Under the heading "Milk and its Products" the two things of the most importance to retailers are butter and cheese. The standard for butter is as follows: "Butter is the clean, non-rancid product made by gathering in any manner the fat of fresh or ripened milk or cream into a mass which also contains a small portion of the other milk constituents, with or without salt, and contains not less than 82.5 per cent. of milk fat, and not more than 16 per cent. of water. Butter may also contain added coloring matter."

Vegetable Products.

Most of the remainder of the articles come under the heading of "Vegetable Products" and treats first with grain products. The measure defines grain, meal, flour, corn meal, rice, oatmeal, rye flour, and buckwheat flour.

The next sub-section deals with fruit in which grocers are more directly interested than in grains. Fruits are defined as "the clean, sound, edible, fleshy fructifications of plants, distinguished by their sweet, acid and ethereal flavors."

Dried fruit, evaporated apples, canned fruit preserve, honey preserve, glucose preserve, jam marmalade, glucose jam, fruit butter, glucose fruit butter, jelly and glucose jelly come under this heading and a standard for each is set.

The "Vegetables and Vegetable Products" are next subdivided, vegetables being defined as "the succulent, clean, sound edible parts of herbaceous plants used for culinary purposes." Under this department come dried and canned vegetables, pickles, salt and sweet pickles, sauerkraut and catsup. The standard for canned vegetables is: "Sound, properly matured and prepared fresh vegetables, with or without salt, sterilized by heat, with or without previous cooking in vessels from which they take up no metallic substance, kept in suitable, clean, hermetically sealed containers, sound and conform in name to the vegetables used in the preparation."

Sugar and Related Substances.

Standards for all kinds of sugars—granulated, loaf, cut, milled and powdered—are given with special mention to maple sugar. Molasses and syrups, klucose products, candy and honey are also given. Maple syrup, by the way, will not be up to the standard—should the measure become law—if it contains more than 35 per cent. of water. Honey must entirely be the product of the work of the bees "operating on the nectar of flowers, etc." Twenty-five per cent. of water is the limit.

Spices and Extracts.

What does not conform with some of the manufacturers' ideas is the strictly chemical definition of the various spices. They claim that the manufacture of some of them, taking into consideration the standards set, is not practical.

"I could go into the factory there" said one manufacturer, "and make a pure pepper and know it to be pure but to analyze to find out whether it is or not would be beyond my power. To conform to the set standard I would have to keep a chemist on the premises and I, as well as many others, might not be able to afford that.

"A chemist anyway is not practical enough," he said and cited an instance where a firm once lost a large shipment of goods because it had taken the advice of a chemist who was all right in theory, but wrong when trade exigencies had to be taken into consideration.

This is one point which some manufacturers at least, would like to have fully discussed. They claim that chemists would be absolutely necessary if the measure passes as it is now drawn up.

The condiments comprise allspice, etc., red pepper, cayenne pepper, cassia, cinnamon, cloves, ginger, mustard, nutmeg, black and white pepper and all the other less common ones.

Standards are named also for each of flavoring extracts, and in some of these differences of opinion exist. In the case of lemon extract, for instance, according to the Food Standards, there must be 5 per cent. by volume of oil of lemon. Manufacturers claim this is excessive, as it will at least double the price of lemon extract to the consumer. In fact, one stated that it would cost more to manufacture a 2-oz. bottle under the new regulation than the consumer now pays for that amount.

Tea is one of the articles upon which it is difficult to set a standard. It is probable, though, that dust will be prohibited, but whether broken stems will be permitted to come within the standard or not is a question. Coffee, cocoa and chocolate in different forms have standards also.

The Beverage Class.

This includes fruit juices, sterilized and concentrated fruit juices, as well as wines, cider, malt, spirituous liquors and vinegar.

Table and dairy salt is defined as "fine-grained crystalline salt containing on a water-free basis not more than 1.4 per cent. of calcium sulphate, not more than five-tenths per cent. calcium, and magnesium chlorides, nor more than one-tenth per cent. of matters insoluble in water, the remainder being at least 98 per cent. of the dry salt, consisting of sodium chloride, with traces of other alkaline haloids."

Standard Preservatives.

The lengthy measure concludes with a list of standard preservatives, which are salt, sugar, vinegar, spices and their essential oils, wood smoke, edible oils and fats and alcohol. The use in food products of any other preservatives or antiseptics or of any substance which preserves or enhances the natural color of a food product or of a coloring matter is forbidden if it is injurious to health or poisonous under the conditions of its use in foods; or if it has not been proven beyond reasonable doubt by scientific investigation to be harmless to health or if it conceals in any way inferiority of the product or counterfeits or enhances a natural color.

Manufacturers claim that when this law comes into force—and it does not have to be passed by Parliament—that no manufactured foods can at all be adulterated, even if they are labeled compounds or mixtures.

The question is undoubtedly a big one and needs much thought. For instance, can it be said that cream of tartar and baking powder are really foods? They are not in the same sense that beefsteak is, because one can live on beefsteak.

The measure is modeled after a United States law, but before it is passed every precaution should be taken to see that it is exactly what is required.

The necessity of Food Standards is clear, in view of the continual adulterations that have come to light through the food inspectors. They are needed to protect the distributor and consumer. It is plain that the higher the standards set the more healthy should the Canadian people become, but the trouble lies in drawing the line. Some consumers want to buy cheap goods always. They want the half-rotten fruit and spoiled meats if they can get them cheaper; but the Government should see that no foods injurious to the health should be sold, and also that when a customer asks for pepper in the store that he gets pepper and not shells.

Too drastic measures, however, may spoil the good that is intended and it is now up to those interested to tender the advice which they have gained by experience and help to make Canada's Food Standards fit models for any country on the globe.

Soap Buying, Selling and Display Suggestions

From Nature of Its Manufacture, Writer Advises no Stock Overloading—Better Satisfaction Will be Given With Fresh Goods—Difference Between Chip and Bar Soap—The Kinds That Sell the Easiest.

By H. D. McMullen.

Soaps, particularly laundry varieties, are frequently the most carelessly handled articles in the average grocery. They are not very perishable merchandise, and a great deal, in the way of window display, can be accomplished by their aid. Also many satisfied, or dissatisfied, customers may be the result of soap sales by the retailer, so one will readily recognize the importance of the soap section of the store, and the necessity of giving it some attention.

Soap manufacturers, of whom there are many, are among the readiest to assist a retailer in disposing soaps. They sometimes dress windows, send various signs, posters, and samples on request, and usually they will do it voluntarily, if business seems to warrant it.

The proper display of soaps has a great bearing on their scale. Making use of one's own ideas, and what help the manufacturers will give. There is no reason why a grocer cannot achieve good results.

Do Not Overstock.

One rather peculiar fact about soap is, that if sold while fresh from the factory, it will be used up by consumers in half the time that it would take if stored for six months, but they will, of course, get better results. The longer it stays in the store, the harder and dryer it becomes, and the longer it takes to use it up. One advantage of a fresh soap to the user, is that it lathers much more freely than old. This, taken in conjunction with the above fact, again points out the poor judgment displayed in overstocking. It will make soap trade much more vigorous to keep smaller stocks and turn them over often, and customers will be better satisfied.

The soap trade is a good one for the average grocer. Everyone has to have it in some form or other, and you might as well, or rather, might better have it than your competitor. As now put up, soaps are different from a few years ago. The oiled inside wrapper, combined with a second cover outside, gives a protection, which never before was given. This, with the better condition of the material inside (which used to be very soft), enables soaps to be left outside, even in winter, whereas formerly they had to be carefully stored, in order to prevent freezing.

Right here some short account of the general methods of manufacture might be given. Every retailer should have a general idea of the manufacture of the goods he sells in order to talk them intelligently. Laundry soaps form a considerable portion of his trade in this line, so the remarks here will be made to apply only to them.

Laundry Soap Facts.

Laundry soaps are divided, in the main, into two general classes, bar and chip. Making bar soap is a three-week process. Rosin, alkali, and grease, the main ingredients, are mixed thoroughly and boiled four days, then allowed to settle two days. The resulting compound is run into frames, and allowed to stay therein three days more, after which it is cut into bars and given three or four days drying. Finally, it is pressed and re-dried for another three or four days, wrapped and sent out, or stored, as the case may be. The process is very tedious and complicated, but, in the hands of one who is thoroughly conversant with it, the methods appear almost simple.

Chip soap differs in manufacture from bar. It is a neutral soap (composed largely of tallow, lye, and soda. Bar soap contains little or no soda. The ingredient, having been properly mixed, the soap is boiled all morning, allowed to settle for a time, and boiled in the afternoon. It is then allowed to settle until the following morning, when it is run into the frames. Two days afterward it is cut into long bars. These are allowed to dry about three weeks. The longer they dry, the better they chip. They are then chipped by a special machine for that purpose.

One rather notable feature about these processes is that they occupy much more time in summer than in winter. This is due, mostly, to the time consumed in cooling the hot liquid during warm weather.

Very often in selling soaps a grocer will give his customer a brand which he knows will not satisfy that customer. Next time she wants soap she goes elsewhere for it, and usually not only her soap trade, but her general grocery trade as well is lost. It even goes beyond that. She tells her neighbors. It is plain what an endless chain of "knocks" can be started in this way with any line of goods, and more particularly in this particular line of business, all for the sake of, perhaps, a few cents. Do not lay yourself open to any such criticisms. A little extra care will make you friends and what is even better, free and walking advertisements.

Private Brands Tabooed.

Private brands are very little used at the present time. One case has come to light, of a large jobbing house, which ordered a car of soap, their own brand. Since they gave that order they have sold five cars of the same soap under its widely known, regular label, while the original car is even yet only half sold. Private brands are much less salable than are advertised brands, which can be turned over in half the time.

Turn-over in the soap business as well as in any other is what keeps life in trade, so that merchants should make it a point to not get overloaded, but buy often and turn the stock into money as rapidly as possible.

TO KEEP RATS FROM STORES.

Mr. Holt describes the ravages made by rodents and explains the work done by the U. S. Department of Agriculture in issuing publications advising how they may be exterminated, in a recent pamphlet, entitled "The Brown Rat in the United States."

Several methods are suggested of driving them off the premises. Among them are the following:—

1. Freshly slaked lime placed dry in all burrows and runs of rats.

2. Freshly made thin whitewash poured into the rat burrows.

3. A strong solution of copperas (ferous sulphate) sprinkled in runs and burrow entrances.

4. Chloride of lime, loose or wrapped in old rags, placed in burrows and runs.

5. Gas tar daubed about the burrow entrances.

6. Caustic potash placed in the burrows and runs.

7. Powdered red pepper scattered in rat runs and burrows.

Owing to their cunning it is not easy to clear premises of rats by trapping.

The Display Window as an Index to the Store Interior

Many Ways by Which it Can Become of Direct Selling Value—Should be Used in Conjunction With Newspaper Advertising—Suggestions as to How a Window Should Be Trimmed.

By A. F. McRae.

There is more to advertising than newspaper and poster advertising. There are a few people who don't read ads., even in this enlightened age. Others never think of noticing or reading them. Yet all these people are buyers.

The window affords the best, and in fact the only means of reaching this class. Not only does it influence those who do not see ads. but it frequently favorably inclines those who have seen and read them. If they come to buy, a good window display will make them more anxious, often being the means of "clinching" a sale.

Window display, when rightly executed, is one of the most effective methods of obtaining trade. There is no advertisement that costs so little in comparison with the good results obtained. Show-window advertising is a necessity in these days of close, active competition—the progressive merchant recognizes this fact and trims his windows in an attractive manner—to the best advantage always.

Every community contains, in proportion to its size, a greater or lesser number of retail establishments in the same line of business. A storekeeper in a small town where competitors are few and the character of his stock is universally known, can, to some extent, neglect his windows, and possibly no perceptible loss of trade will result. But where the town is large enough to support half a dozen or more stores, the value of a good window display cannot be estimated.

In the smaller towns the displays are practically alike, differing only in a few minor details. Obviously then, any particular window display must be original and distinctive in conception and cleverly executed, if it is to excel the displays of competitors to any noticeable extent.

There are different ways of achieving this distinctive effect. One way is to change the display regularly and often, making it an exhibition place for the new, seasonable or erstwhile particularly attractive things 6in your store. Special bargains, too, have their value in making a "fetching" window display. Another way is to use novelties to attract attention. And still another way is to permit the plate glass to go unwashed, to let the dust accumulate on the goods shown, and in brief, to neglect the windows generally, This last might be termed "negative" distinctiveness.

Confusion in Numbers.

The most effective window is usually the one which contains a small assortment of goods arranged in such a manner that the entire showing can be taken in at one glance. Too many articles, unless they be smallwares, only serve to distract the attention, confuse the eye, and destroy the attention-compelling effect which is made possible by an attractive arrangement of one or two lines of especially interesting goods.

People pass and repass a store which they have never yet entered. They glance at the windows and something therein attracts their attention. They stop and look and gradually the conviction comes over them that the article they see is precisely what they need for a certain purpose and they go in and buy it. If the purchase gives satisfaction the chances are they will come back again and a regular customer is secured simply because the windows had received proper attention.

When you walk up a residential street you often look in at the windows of the houses as you pass, and you form an opinion, perhaps unconsciously, of what kind of a home is back of the window you see. If you see a pair of dainty curtains inside of the shiny window you will naturally conclude that the rest of the house must be as dainty and neat. The window is an index to the house.

It is the same thing over and over again when those people pass your store, They look in your window and from its appearance judge the inside of your store. The window creates either a good or a bad impression. Of course you wish the former, and this can only be gained by making your window neat and attractive. The best way, and really the only way, is to have everything clean and the show window as bright and shiny as a piece of newly washed plate glass can be made ; to have your window well lighted and in it displayed attractive merchandise.

Your windows are reflectors of your store. To attract customers keep your windows attractive.

When a Window Does its Duty.

Nine out of ten men or women, when they sally forth to buy anything, will invariably look in the show windows before going in the store. If they are passing your store to go to a competitor's, a good attractive display can at least , entice them to examine your goods. Or if as they pass your store on sundry business, as hundreds probably do every day, they are attracted by the display and in glancing toward the window their attention is drawn to some article that appeals either directly or indirectly to them, and the chances are they will "just step in" to enquire the particulars. Or better still, if the price be displayed the sale is oftentimes clinched on the spot, and few will turn away with "well I won't bother to-day," as many are likely to do if they are required to step inside the door to inquire particulars. However, once they are in the salesman's hands the window has done its duty.

How many times will a man saunter home with a parcel under his arm, and when accosted by his wife as to what he has brought home, say : "Oh, I saw this in so-and-so's window and thought you'd like it." Isn't there a moral in this for you ?

Then again, the value of newspaper advertising is greatly augmented by an appropriate window display. People who have seen your advertisement in the daily paper will have it brought forcibly to mind by seeing a display of the goods advertised in your window. If interested it will prove a direct invitation—and often a very pressing one, to come in.

Do not underestimate the value of your windows. The pith of the argument is found in the fact that many people find it hard to make a selection of hats, shoes and many other things in any other manner than by walking from store to store, until they see what they want in the window. It runs against the grain of most folks to have to look through a merchant's stock without making a purchase—they feel obliged to "do the best they can" after having put the salesman to the trouble of showing them the stock. For this very reason a goodly proportion of the public will not go into a store unless they see what they want in the window.

Assistance From Price Cards.

Not only do people look for things they want in the window, but they buy lots of things they don't need, and had no idea of buying, simply because they were attractively arranged in the window—a very strong inducement.

It is kerfectly natural that retailers should wish their windows to convey an adequate idea of the quantity and variety of their offerings, but a display loses much of its value if so many goods are shown as to give the window a congested appearance. If your windows are too small to display a variety to advantage, put in a few articles and change often so as to show the extent of your stock. On any event don't crowd.

Neat price cards should always be attached to each article, except in the case of a display of new goods when a neat announcement card should be used. Price cards are silent salesmen.

The value of the show window to the retailer, then, lies in keeping it bright, attractive and expressive of the nature and value of the offerings to be found inside, in displaying new goods, or in calling direct attention to some special values at the time they are being offered, when the windows may be the means of closing many sales.

Where Window Displays are Changed Every Day

Ideas of a Montreal Trimmer, Who Attracts Constant Crowds —Unsanitary, He Says, to Place Fruit and Vegetables Outside —Uses a Slanting Bottom—Novel Animated Baking Powder Display.

It is astonishing what artistic and varied window display will do toward increasing trade.

Armand Larue, with the Stanford Market, Montreal, who is one of the cleverest originators in window display in the city, gave the writer a few of his ideas on the subject.

He does not believe in outside displays. They are not sanitary, he says, and a certain percentage of the goods becomes damaged. A constant change, both of goods and their display, is one of his maxims. His own windows are changed almost daily, and keep the passersby wondering what the next will be.

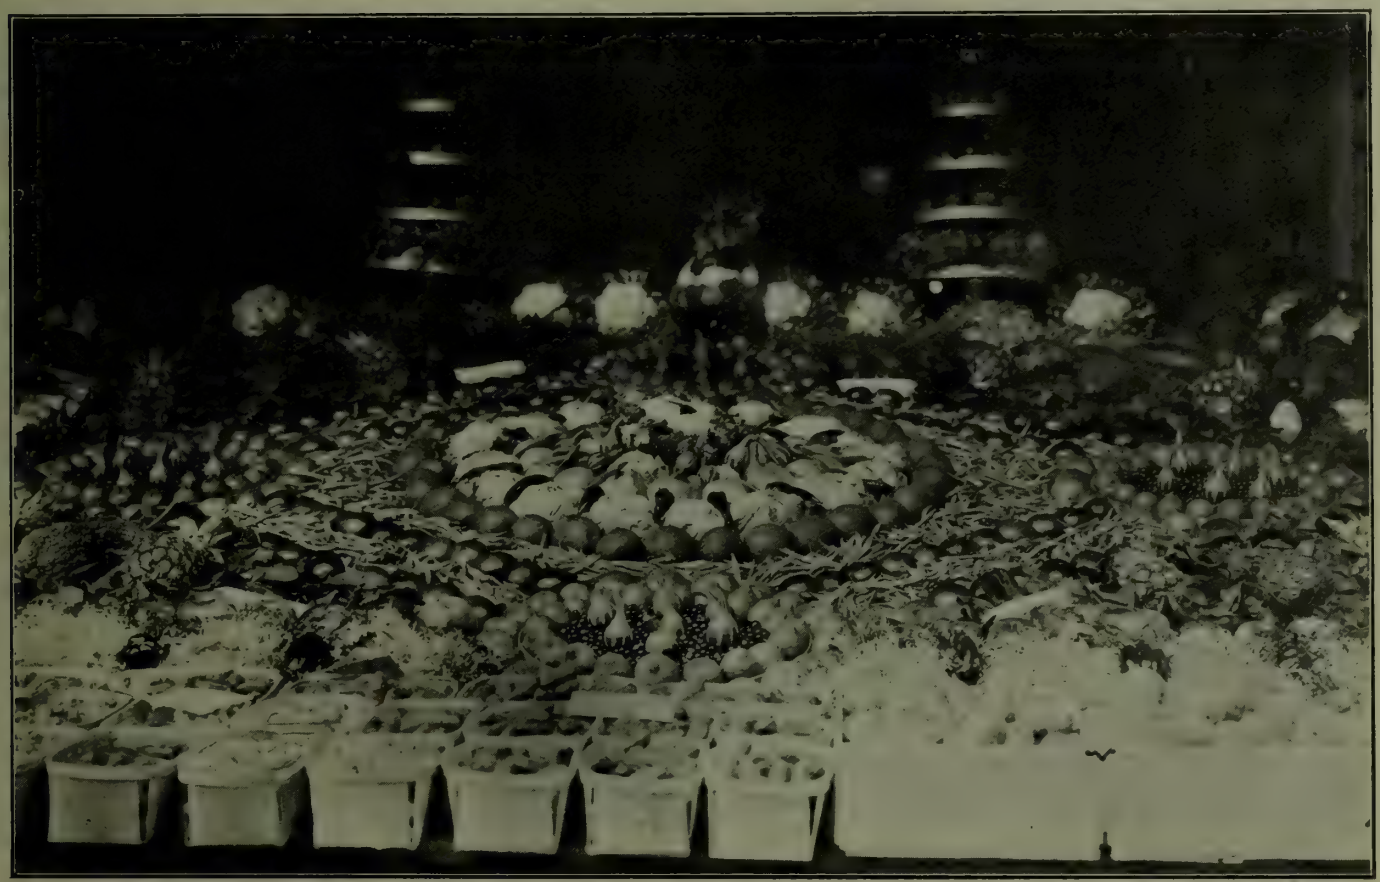
As an example of his work, the accompanying cut will show his ideas on the subject more clearly than a pen picture. It is only one of his every-day displays, and is made up entirely of fresh fruits and vegetables. It gives an idea of what can be accomplished with the average grocery stock. The best comment on its success is the almost continuous crowd surrounding all of the displays at the Stanford Market.

The two stands at the back of the window are very cheaply constructed of sheet metal trays on a central rod, and are one of the varied sizes and shapes Mr. Larue has had made for this purpose. The general background is composed of cauliflowers and pineapples, the foreground of basket and box goods. The centre design has a very pretty color effect, which, of course, is not shown so well by the cut, as it appears to passers-by. However, the general effect is well shown and is worth study.

Front of McDowell & Kinnis' Grocery, Vancouver, B.C. With Ideas for a Thanksgiving or Christmas Window.

According to Mr. Larue, there is no need of any great expense in window dressing, provided a man has ingenuity and imagination. Just try to figure out something which would appeal to yourself as a prospective customer, and you have his general idea of producing windows that show results.

Perishables, such as fruits and vegetables, are the best articles to use, as they are more liable to be spoiled by too long acquaintance with the store. By having them always attractively prominent, quicker sales are made, and naturally this is what is wanted. An occasional window of staples makes sufficient variety to prevent customers be-



Lamy, 481 Notre Dame Street West, Montreal, there was a splendid display of baking powder recently.

The central figure was an automatic dummy, representing a Hindoo magician. In front of him was a table, covered with the usual black cloth. A cover was in his left hand, which was raised at intervals. First, is shown a can of the baking powder. The cover was then lowered and next time was shown a model of a biscuit, supposedly made by the charm of the powder in the few seconds intervening.

At the dummy's left hand was a column formed of the various sizes of cans. Cardboard cans and arms holding cans it is, and if one does, others follow. The whole principle of window display advertising is primarily to attract attention, which attention should lead to people entering your store. After that it is "up to" the clerks and the quality of your stock to make the customers and keep them.

C. D. Allen, grandson of the late Fred Allen, founder of the firm of that name in England, from a candy manufacturing standpoint, has just been appointed to the position of manager of the confectionery department of A. E. Rea, Ltd., of Montreal.

coming tired of sameness. An infinite variety of windows can be produced from any well-regulated grocery, and, by a little study, will be found to sell their fair share and more, of goods.

As various lines of fruits and vegetables come on the market, they can be used to great advantage, the color variety being usually good and the size easy to handle in such displays.

A slanting bottom in the window makes arrangement much simpler, as, on it, nearly all the goods are clearly shown to passersby. Small stands in a window will very often enable one to obtain effects otherwise impossible.

In the department store of A. & E.

filled most of the intervening space. In front were small eight-inch peddlers, carrying advertising signs. The background was formed by posters and signs in both French and English. Judging from the crowds in front of the window, it accomplished thoroughly the purpose for which it was created—good advertising.

Often a display which gains instant attention from the observer is a single specimen of some vegetable, say, for instance, a pumpkin, which is exceptional in its size. With a few sheets of colored tissue to cover the bare boards and the pumpkin used as a centre, people will almost invariably stop to see what

A grocer cannot be too careful to have his store smelling "clean." A Montreal merchant of long experience says it is one of the most attractive things about a grocery store to him, to have it free from any objectionable odor. Just ask yourself, which state of affairs would appeal to you most. Spoiled fruit is among the worst offenders.

Neglect your show windows and you neglect a splendid opportunity which lies right at your door, to increase your business; for no part of publicity is more helpful in increasing sales than the window, which, in a sense, introduces your store to the public.

Importance of Window Displays in Holiday Trade

From Thanksgiving to Christmas a Busy Season for the General Merchant—Trade Developed by Making AttractiveWindow Displays—One Window Can Well be Given up to a Special Display While Using the Other for Seasonable Goods—Harvest and Hallowe'en Displays Also Suggested.

With Thanksgiving Day only a short time away, merchants are reminded of the necessity to prepare for the holiday season, and every effort should be made from now and until Christmas to make the volume of fall and holiday business show a substantial increase over previous years. Crops have been good, factories have been running with full staffs, and in some cases overtime, and as a result money is freer and conditions are right for an energetic campaign for an increased holiday trade.

Merchants will do well to order holiday stocks early and see that the members of the staff, who look after the advertising and window dressing prepare their work ahead, so that when the real busy season arrives no time will be lost and every possible minute can be given to the important work of selling. And with work of this kind done in advance an early selling campaign can be instituted, and a large hole made in the holiday wares during the early part of December, good customers being advised to buy early, when the stocks are at their best, and the opportunity for making a selection the greatest.

As a beginner for the fall and holiday campaign, nothing could be better than an attractive Thanksgiving window display, as a good beginning will go a long way towards impressing the enterprise of the store upon those whost custom you most desire. And just as "calamity howling" and talking "hard times" has a bad effect upon business by encouraging those who have money to spend to put it away into safe keeping, so will an air of prosperity, and a few words regarding the "return of prosperity" have a desirable effect upon business.

In the accompanying engraving we show a Thanksgiving window trim, which is within the reach of any retailer who has a clerk on his staff capable of making a rough design on canvas. Or if such a clerk is not at hand the local sign painter can be called into service. In the design the background only is painted, the log cabin, sky and tree in the distance being sketched on canvas, the door being left ajar and two wax figures dressed in Puritan costume placed there. This could be varied by having the figures dressed in pioneer or backwoods costume.

Suggestion for Something New in Window Dressing For Thanksgiving Time.

The display shown in the photograph was made by the Jones Hardware Co., Richmond, Indiana, they aiming to reproduce a scene showing an attack by Indians, just as the two puritans were leaving their log cabin to attend Thanksgiving service. Two arrows will be seen sticking into the cabin wall near the turkey, which is tied to a block and ready for execution. In a display of this kind a live turkey would add realism to the shocks of corn and pumpkins on the turf in front of the cabin.

As stated before a timely display of this kind, even though it means some expense and trouble to prepare, will repay the retailer, who wants to begin his holiday campaign by attracting attention to his store. The local newspapers will be only too glad to publish paragraphs describing the window, and farmers who come to town will be sure to visit the store to see the display.

SOME PRACTICAL POINTERS.

Suggestions Gathered From Actual Occurrences in Canadian Grocery Stores.

Here are some things that should not be observed in a good grocery store:

A box of dried apricots standing all summer in a conspicuous place at the mercy of flies and dust.

A clerk wiping the butter knife on his dirty apron.

Mixing tea in the hopper of his scales with dirty hands.

Fruit outside of the store, within reach of dogs.

Sampling butter by taking it off the tryer with the teeth and putting it back again.

Handling fish and then biscuits without washing the hands.

Tea and soap piled together on the same shelf.

Meat and butter in the same compartment in the refrigerator.

Silent salesmen in neglected condition.

Everything standing round in confusion; nothing in order, and everything in the way.

A lady asking for 40c tea, persuaded to try a 25c tea.

A grocer dodging a traveler by slipping out the back door.

A grocer selling a line of biscuits for over a year below cost and not knowing it.

The whole window used by other people for bill boards, and not a sign of the name of the proprietor.

A clerk making out a bill with ten grammatical errors in it.

A grocer who says he has no time to read a trade paper.

Importance of Knowing How to Figure Profits

Should They be Figured on the Sale or Cost?—Percentage of Profit in Relation to Cost Expenses and Selling Price—Proper Methods Earn Dividends Just as Well as the Selling Department.

By Howard R. Wellington.

Is not the customary method of figuring profit based to-day on the net cost? And yet, is not every other percentage, such as commission, discount, allowance, etc., figured on the selling price? If we are to make a financial success in any business, it is absolutely necessary that the correct basis of figuring percentages of profit, expenses, discount, etc., must be adopted from the first. We sometimes look upon our offices as a necessary but burdensome expense, but the office, if equipped with the proper methods and records, earns dividends for the business as well as the manufactory or selling departments.

Nine times out of every ten, the business which does not succeed can trace the cause to the fact that somewhere in the organization or in the application of principles, there has been either a lack of system or an erroneous interpretation of certain standards in regard to percentages of profit and expense. Every merchant should aim to get his business on a basis where he can tell at once, first—whether he is making or losing money; second—how much is made or lost during a period; third—if a loss, where the leakage has occurred; fourth—what percentage his expenses, etc., bear to his total sales.

Another View of Gain.

Do the profits of one department in your store conceal the losses of another? Is there a difference between the gain as applied to, say, increased population, and the percentage of profit as applied to money transactions?

We believe there is. For instance, the population of a city increases from 40,000 to 60,000—what is the percentage of gain—50 per cent.

We say that we make 25 per cent. by adding 25 cents to every dollar of cost, whereas the percentage of profit is only 20 per cent. by figuring percentage of profit on the sales.

Now, which is right? Should not the percentage of profit and the percentage of cost of doing business be figured on the same basis?

The cost (net cost) usually means invoice price, plus cost of laying goods down in store, and between this cost and the selling price, items such as rent, insurance, salaries, salesmen, etc., must be provided for. Sales totals are always recorded by the merchant, and used for comparison from year to year. Cost totals for the goods sold are not as a rule recorded, so that it is very difficult to figure percentages on other than sales totals.

Salesman's Commissions.

We sent a representative out on the road on a commission of ten per cent.; his commissions are figured always on his net sales.

Is it not reasonable then, to figure percentages of profit on the net sales?

We are not laying down any rule to be followed in this connection, but are simply presenting this matter from different view-points so that the reader may adapt himself to the correct method of figuring his percentage of profits.

A man sells an article for $12.50 which cost him $10, and basing his percentage of profit on the cost, figured that he was making a profit of 25 per cent. At the end of the year the sales totalled $20,000, yielding a gross profit of $5,000, but his books only show that $4,000 has been made, or a percentage of 20 per cent. on the sales of $20,000.

Another Example.

A business is transferred to a joint stock corporation. Four per cent. is added to the cost of all goods to cover freight, insurance, etc., or to obtain "cost laid down." The goods are inventoried at the advance of four per cent., but the new company arranges to purchase the stock at invoice cost. Now, what is necessary under such circumstances? The goods must be reduced to cost, for if we add four per cent. to the invoice cost and deduct the four per cent. to obtain invoice cost, the result will naturally be less than original invoice cost.

Table for guidance of merchants in figuring percentages of profit:

16 2-3 p.c. added to cost is 14¼ p.c. profit on selling price.

20 p.c. added to cost is 16 2-3 p.c. profit on selling price.

25 p.c. added to cost is 20 p.c. profit on selling price.

33 1-3 p.c. added to cost is 25 p.c. profit on selling price.

40 p.c. added to cost is 28½ p.c. profit on selling price.

50 p.c. added to cost is 33 1-3 p.c. profit on selling price.

100 p.c. added to cost is 50 p.c. profit on selling price.

We shall be glad to hear from readers in regard to the principles outlined, and will devote another page to the discussion if necessary.

A TRAVELER HONORED.

Rupert Prat Retires From the Staff of Red Rose Tea—Presentation From Associates.

After thirteen years as salesman for T. H. Estabrooks, nine of which were spent in Ontario, Rupert Prat has retired from the road and will hereafter devote his attention to fire and accident insurance. He has associated himself with Reed, Shaw & McNaught, one of the oldest established agencies in Toronto, representing the Liverpool, London & Globe and a number of other old tariff companies.

Mr. Prat was one of the first travelers for Red Rose Tea and during his years on the road has followed the growth of the business carefully.

Mr. Prat was one of the ablest salesmen on the road and is held in the highest regard by a great many merchants throughout Ontario and in the maritime provinces where he represented Red Rose Tea before coming to Ontario.

The traveling and office staff of the Toronto branch of Red Rose Tea united with the firm to express their appreciation of his services and regret at his retirement and presented him with a handsome horned alligator traveling bag with stirling silver fittings and accompanied it with the following address:

Rupert Prat,
595 Markham St.,
Toronto.

Dear Mr. Prat,—Upon the occasion of your quitting the traveling staff of Red Rose Tea and your retirement from the road for easier and more lucrative labors, the firm, traveling and office staffs unite heartily in the statement that they very much regret your going, and that you carry with you the respect and the warm regard coupled with the heartiest well wishes of the workers who have been associated with you.

For thirteen years you have been in the van of Red Rose Tea salesmen. You have played the game hard but fair and through all those years have done your full share in lifting higher the standards of salesmanship, of business probity and of conduct among travelers.

In token of our very sincere regard and hearty well wishes, we ask you to accept this traveling bag, so that whenever again, for a little while, you take the road you may have pleasure in recalling those other days when you strove with the rest of us to convince the great world of grocers and the greater world of housewives that Red Rose Tea "is good tea."

Yours very truly,
Signed on behalf of Mr. Estabrooks and the staff.

You can't run a store on a "just out" basis. People soon find out what stores are always "just out" and what ones have the goods.

Simple System Devised to Keep Track of Finances

Retail Grocer Institutes What He Calls a "Comparative Statement" Showing Approximately Where He stands at End of Each Month—A Book-keeping Scheme Which Has Brought Good Results—Can Easily Figure out His Profits.

By D. W. Fry, Vineland, Ont.

I have been very much interested in some of the articles contained in your publication. This is the second year we have been receiving it, and while of course, we haven't time to read all the articles and contributions, some of the ideas set forth are certainly worth more than what the paper costs. It is the privilege of each reader to select such as are of use to him or her. Any merchant should be able to pick out from the mass of experience presented, something which will be of benefit in his particular locality.

In order to get the most out of The Grocer, each subscriber should be willing to lend a hand and contribute the benefit of his own personal experience. This is strictly speaking OUR PAPER, and the more practical experiences its columns contain, the greater the value to us.

Know Where You are at.

When the writer was a boy, a grocer in our vicinity was forced to make an assignment, and it was remarked at the time that he did not make a practice of taking inventories, that he borrowed from one party to pay another when necessary, and that he never knew where he stood financially. That idea has followed me through life, and when I began business at Vineland, Ont., six years ago, without experience in storekeeping, it was with the determination to know where I was at as I went along.

With this end in view I made use of a system which came under my notice some years ago. This I call a Comparative Statement, made monthly, which I find satisfactory for the general store business. I use a cheap book for the purpose, ruled as in the illustration shown herewith, which will give a clearer idea than any explanation which might be given otherwise.

It will be seen that July, 1909, can be readily compared with July, 1908. In the fixed expense column I have included interest, insurance and taxes. Salary could also be included if desired. For net results, to be safe and conservative, I estimate 15 per cent. profit. Take for instance July, 1909; sales were $1,574.90. At 15 per cent. the profit would amount to $235.63, which with a total expenditure of $180.69 would leave a profit of about $55.

The Special column will show that a new rig was purchased in July, 1909, which would affect the net results. Of course the figures shown are not all as they actually occurred.

By being careful about one's records, the report can be made out in a few minutes. I have a daily cash book, and a little addition gives me the results for the month. The purchases and unpaid bills also are easy to arrive at.

While this result is not exactly correct it is sufficiently close for all practical purposes and is an excellent gauge as to the condition of business. I have this information in one book for every month for six years, and it is very gratifying to notice that in only two months in that period of time have the sales been less than for the same month in the previous year.

This system is respectfully submitted for the benefit of anyone who cares to make use of it.

"A BUNDLE OF GOODS AND A PACK OF LIES."

A merchant there was and he wanted to rise
(Even as you and I),
And perch on a cloud in commercial skies,
So he thought up a scheme—Oh, he was dead wise—
With a bundle of goods went a pack of lies.
(He wanted the people to buy).
Into the papers went this dealer bold,
(Even as you and I),
He used big ads. and the tales he told,
No doubt, would have knocked Munchausen cold;
And merrily on went he and sold.
(His neighbors were you and I).
He wanted the business, but, alas, alack,
(Even as you and I),
The goods he sold, as a matter of fact,
Were shoddy, and, of course, they all came back.
And the buyers were angry, for they held the sack.
(As predicted by you and I).
This merchant knows that good ads. pay
But he didn't know, sad to convey.
(Even as you and I).
That advertisers must back what they say,
And not treat customers any old way,
(As whispered by you and me).

—Oscar Kaiser in "Fame."

The merchant who allows his goods to be misrepresented to his customers is stealing away his own trade, for misrepresentation is the thief of trade.

Mercantile Methods an old Grocer Would Adopt

Providing He Were to Begin Afresh in the Grocery Trade—Ideas Gained From Experience of 35 Years—How Customers, Salesmen and Commercial Travelers Would be Handled—Strict Buying Methods Would Prevail.

By H. C. Armstrong.

In talking with a young grocer not long ago, who is anxious to make the very best of the business, he asked me, as an old grocer, and also as one who has had opportunities of seeing and studying the mehods employed by grocers in conducting their businesses, what changes and improvements I would make if I were to start a grocery business to-day. This is a question which means rather more than I can easily answer. I have been out of the business now for three years. Prior to that time I spent 32 years in the trade.

Changes in a store must largely be the outcome of existing circumstances and conditions. Certain methods work well in some cities, or even in one section of a city, and not in another. Among these are the cash and credit systems. In certain localities in certain towns and cities I would most certainly do a credit business, but in others I would not attempt anything but a strictly cash trade.

But there are certain things I would follow and recommend which apply to all conditions and all localities, and to these I will confine my answer.

Conveniences Essential.

In the first place, I would select my location, where I could reach a class of people who would appreciate the services I would intend to give them. I would want my store fitted up, not necessarily very expensive, but convenient, so that my goods, rather than the fixtures, would attract attention. I would want to impress every customer with the idea that the goods are handled more carefully and with greater regard to cleanliness, than in any other store. I would like a good-sized warehouse, where all my goods were taken in, and unpacked, and nothing would be allowed in the store but clean goods ready to sell. I would not carry more goods in the store than I could keep perfectly clean and properly and attractively displayed.

I would have nothing whatever exposed to dust and flies, in the line of foodstuffs. Instead of exposing figs, dates, candies, raisins, prunes, etc., I would have neat samples placed under glass, but I would never open whole boxes and have them standing around for people to finger and handle. I would keep the floor clean and entirely free from all kinds of boxes and bags; instead, I would have nice, light chairs for the accommodation of ladies, either when they were giving their orders or waiting for their turn to be served.

I would have my windows dressed with a few things tastefully arranged, but I would never fill them up as if I had no other room in which to keep anything.

The effect of a window is often lost by trying to show too many things. People in passing can only be attracted by one or two articles. It is worth far more to a grocer if a lady passes his window and she goes home and talks about certain nice raisins she saw at so much a pound, than if he had a nice window display, but that she couldn't remember what was in it. Windows should be rearranged almost every day, and this can easily be done, and the glass cleaned, if there are not too many goods to be removed.

Make Impressions on Customers.

I would have a water-tap and washbasin not in a dirty corner behind some boxes, with a dirty rag for a towel, but I would have them in open view, and as clean as a pin, with a spotless white towel where the hands are washed in sight of the customer when anything of a greasy nature has been handled. Grease is not dirt in its right place, but when it gets mixed up from the hands in fancy biscuits, tea, etc., it becomes dirt and is disgusting.

Whether I could wait on the people myself or not, I would make it a rule to notice every customer who came into the store and make them feel that I appreciated their trade, and if possible pass a friendly word with them, to make them feel perfectly at home. In doing this the same attention must be shown to all, whether they are rich or poor, old or young. This, I am convinced, is the cheapest and most effectual advertising a grocer can do.

Standards for Salesmen.

My clerks would have to measure up to the standard, which would compare favorably in every respect with my system of storekeeping. The aim of each must be to do his best, and learn to do better each day. By this I do not mean to work harder and be a greater slave, but to learn from day to day how better to please and serve the customers, and at the same time improve and increase the business.

I would want them to feel that I appreciate their efforts, and I would want them to know that I take as much interest in them as I would expect them to take in my affairs. If a clerk works for me I owe him more than his salary. I owe him the benefit of my superior knowledge of the business, and the guidance of my riper experience in life. I must take them into my confidence and at least once a week meet them in conference, to give advice and take advice from each as to our mutual benefit. I would want each one during the week to put down on a slip of paper anything that may occur to him, where he thought improvement could be made. I would even want to know where and in what company they were spending their evenings, and assist them in getting them to spend their evenings to their own best advantages. In short, I would want the best clerks in the city, and I would want them to feel that they reached that point through the assistance I gave them, and to know that real success can only be reached through the practice of honesty, sincerity, perseverance and courage.

Attention to Travelers.

I would treat every traveler the same as I would treat my customers. They are necessary to my business, and they deserve the same courteous treatment that they would get if they came to buy, whether I want anything or not. I would, however, have to be firm and only buy when, in my own judgment, I think it is to my interest to do so. I would, however, positively not allow any one to load me up with more goods of any kind than I would be able to handle in a reasonable time. I would emphatically put my foot down on all chances of getting stale goods on my hands. I would confine myself strictly to retailing, and not have anything to do with speculating.

Stale goods has ruined many a grocer, and in order to have them right they must be bought and sold when they are at their best. I would allow no goods to lie idle on my shelves. They would either have to sell or I would give them away. I would buy carefully, but promptly, when needed. I would deal with good houses, and pay my bills so promptly that I would stand a chance of getting the very best they have to offer.

I would try to be good to myself and close my store at reasonable hours, and devote at least one evening each week to the reading of the best grocery trade paper I know of to keep myself posted in the best methods of storekeeping.

Vigilance Over Small Matters Tends to Success

How Merchants Often Neglect the Little Things and the Results That Follow—Methods of Vancouver Grocers, Illustrating Their Care in Attending to Details in Store Arrangements—Business Bringers That Necessitate But Little Thought.

By R. B. Bennett.

After one talks to a man who has made a success of whatever line of business he is in, he realizes that after all it is not any single particular thing that brings results, but simply the eternal vigilance concerning the little things. Even if it were never impressed upon the mind in the earlier years that "he who is faithful in little things shall be made ruler over great things," it would certainly be learned afterward. Conditions do not change, and the same thing applies to-day, as at any other stage of the world's history. The man who worries himself trying to think out some scheme whereby success will be brought with one big swoop will likely worry himself out of business altogether. The man who does what is to his hand, doing it well, letting the morrow take care of itself as it were, will have success come to him.

The London Grocery, Vancouver, B.C., Showing Unique Display Methods. Mirrors on Either Side Reproduce Signs and Lights Indefinitely.

In conversation with grocers who have gone ahead, this truth is brought home all the stronger. A man is apt to think the grocery business is such an every-day affair that if one is courteous over taking orders and quick in passing them out, the rest will take care of itself. True, is requires a few ideas to be worked out, but none of these should be beyond the reach of an ordinary man's intellect, if he but sets out to make his store just as much the best as possible.

These points may be illustrated by reference to individual cases. In Vancouver, for instance, is the London grocery. When F. W. Welsh took this over with a monthly turnover of $1,200, what did he do to bring the receipts up to $10,000 or more? He had the idea of a new front, in which to display his goods; wide space between counters; no rigs at the front door for drivers to interrupt or jostle customers; all the handling of orders at the rear by a separate staff, thus leaving the counter clerks free to attend to those who came in. Some of these ideas may not have been new, but the combination was effective. The permanent front was moved back several feet, giving good space on either side of the street entrance, the display tables being covered with tile. On these are always to be found the nicest and newest goods in the store, with prices attached. Being on one of the principal streets of the city, passersby are caught by a look, and one will say, "There's just what I want." If he had not seen it, ten to one he would never have thought of it. Instead of second-crop strawberries being left until too late to sell, they are snapped up, and the same with other seasonable perishables. The mirrors on either side of the displays are something new. They act doubly, and looking into either one can see a never-ending vista of the principal sign, which is always out, and innumerable lights reflected from the one main arc, stretching away into the distance. It is a fine idea, and might well be worked out along some other line inside the store.

The man with a small establishment might say, "Well, if I had a big store, I could do something." The London Grocery is not a large place. It is only 25 feet in width, with a fair length, but everything is just so that people soon find out that things are about as well as they could be under the circumstances.

Three Parts to Store Front.

Another successful firm is McDowell & Kinnis, also on Granville Street. Six years ago they started in a very small way, smaller than most merchants do. To-day, they sell thirty tons of poultry alone a year, making a specialty of this, and do a very large grocery business. Mr. McDowell originated his own open front also. This has three parts, two permanent on either side and a large, movable one in the centre, thus giving two entrances. When closed, the windows simply pull down. With tile base, these display tables can be washed down easily, and kept fresh and clean. For a Sunday display, there is no better means, and as there is no double handling morning and night, much time is saved. Mr. McDowell has a new idea in mind for a larger store, for larger quarters are becoming necessary. This firm, too, handles its goods at the rear, a method now being adopted by all the grocers that look well after the customers.

While these two are noted as illustrations, the same features may be noticed in other establishments, with, perhaps, variations. Specialties are made of some particular thing, and if the dealer is particular and patient he will find that people soon discover where a certain thing is always to be found the best.

A grocer would do well to study the wants of his customers, just as much as the careful housewife does the notions of her husband, for, after all, she has to come to the store to get what she wants to keep her husband in good humor. If she gets it without trouble, then both are pleased; but it means more than a dealer ever knows if he has to say that he is "just out." Even if a small ledger had to be kept so: Mrs. A., always a certain kind of catsup, or pickles, etc.; Mrs. B., a particular soap; Mrs. C., her favorite articles, for hers means generally those of the man behind the purse. —it would be worth while. Then, a look at the list in spare time or at the end of the day, will show what additions should be made to stock before it is too late.

Be Prompt in Serving.

Another observation leads one to suggest never to keep children waiting. If they are kept longer than their parent expects, they are questioned so that it may be made sure that they have not lingered on the road, and it should not be put to a dealer's debit that he talked with a man while the child, apparently unimportant, waited at the counter. This is a literal case, where close attention should be paid to the little things.

Prompt rendering of accounts is a feature that might not be ordinarily thought of from the point of view of retaining custom. Yet, I am told by a dealer, that he counts this among the other things not to neglect. This would apply especially to the man who supplies people who are good payers. A good payer is generally a particular man, and keeps track of his accounts. He looks for his bill, and to have it drop along any time before the middle of the month is apt to lead to the belief on the part of the customer that the dealer is not very particular. Punctuality and regularity is an old-time motto, and here is a case where it would work out well.

Ways of Improvement.

It is such as these that are business bringers. The man in the store with his eyes open can always see little ways for improvement. One must be ever alert, not afraid of being obliging, and ready always. Not long ago, a case was brought personally to my notice that is worth reproducing. A man had moved into a new locality, and the first meal in the new house was a pick-up, served somewhat late. Something was wanted, and from the window could be seen the lights of a grocery store. Upon telephoning, no answer could be secured. Just to make sure, the man went across, and was just in time to find the dealer closing up, though not out of the store. He managed to get in, and said he had telephoned, and the dealer remarked that he had heard it, but he had closed. He never knew that he lost a good customer or rather, he never gained it, and not another purchase was made at the store, the disappointed man going down-town, since there was no other grocery within a convenient distance.

The biggest merchant princes started in small ways, with one eye always on the main chance and the other on the means to the end. If the eyes are kept fixed, the brain will work, and if a man has brains enough to get into business, he will find that when it works, ideas follow, and the steady development of them brings, incidentally, the success that is always desired.

Are the cash receipts of your store all in the money drawer at night? Are you certain about it or do you only guess so? If there is a little that you don't get, there may be much.

A Traveler's Story of the Downfall of a Grocer

Once Had the Finest Trade in Large Ontario City, But Because He Speculated on Things of Which He Knew Nothing, He Failed—Owed About $70,000—Ten Cents on the Dollar Wound up the Business—Advice on Speculating.

"Some years ago," remarked a traveler in a reminiscent mood the other day, "I remember how a most progressive grocer in one of the large Ontario cities came to his downfall by dabbling in stocks—something that he knew nothing about.

"His case always brings to my mind that old adage—old as the hills, yet young as the morning dew—that 'the cobbler should stick to his last.'

"It was some 20 or 25 years ago," he went on, "when this grocer was at the height of his mercantile career. He was by long odds the most successful merchant in the city. He bought on an extensive plan, and his note was considered as good as gold; but all of a sudden he 'went up' and owed his creditors about $70,000. They only got 10 cents on the dollar.

"This man used to cater to the best trade in that city; he sold to all the leading hotels and restaurants and best families. Wholesalers used to wonder at the grasp he had on the trade, and all used to cultivate his business acquaintance as much as possible.

"Why he bought sugar—50 barrels at a time, and 50 chests of tea was a usual order.

A Shrewd Buyer.

"He was a fine buyer—one of the shrewdest with which we had to contend. He made money simply by his business ability in buying where others lost it.

"In those days credits were of long standing, and wholesalers were owed thousands of dollars where now hundreds are due them. People seemed to get their money at longer intervals than they do now, and the wholesaler simply had to wait until the retailer was paid.

"But it didn't matter how much this fellow owed the jobbers. They were all confident that he was doing the business, and that he would be good for anything they carried on their books.

"The firm with whom I was employed sold him thousands of dollars worth of goods. He was their best customer, and we all were supposed to do our utmost to please him. He never outstayed his welcome at our house, and he came often to buy.

Wanted Extension of Time.

"One day, however, a peculiar thing happened. For the first time so far as we knew he neglected to meet the whole of his note. Half of it was renewed, but was paid when it fell due again.

"Gradually he began to renew over and over again. He didn't seem to be able to meet any note, and that was certainly quite a surprise to us. One of our travelers, who called regularly on him, was told by our employer not to take any more orders from him. This was, as might be expected, startling news to the salesman.

"'Why,' he said, 'that's awful; if I don't sell him goods I may as well quit the job.'

"He was nevertheless finally persuaded not to call on this grocer again, with no reason given him. But a few days later that same traveler came into the office with an order from him for 50 half chests of tea.

"'I thought I told you not to call on that man again,' said the boss.

"'Why, I didn't either,' he answered; 'I was going along the opposite side; of the street and he beckoned me to come across. I did so and he gave me the order—I couldn't refuse it.'

"He was warned not to even cross the street again, although that particular order was filled.

"It was pretty hard to get the money out of him. He would renew his notes time after time, and when he gave cheques, very frequently when they were presented for payment the 'no funds' answer was handed out. Eventually we got the account down to about $19, and we got a cheque for that. But it was a week or more before it could be cashed, because of 'no funds.' At last the house got him off the books entirely, and it kept off.

"Finally all of a sudden this fellow 'went up.' It leaked out that he had been speculating in wheat in Chicago—something that he knew nothing about—and he began to lose. He went deeper and deeper into the hole in the hope of getting out, with the result that he collapsed entirely with liabilities about $70,000. His creditors only received 10 cents on the dollar.

Stay in Your Own Field.

"I'm telling you this," the traveler went on, "just to show how important it is for a grocer to remain in his own trade. Speculate if you want to, but speculate on something you know something about, not on wheat or mining stocks—unless you are thoroughly acquainted with the situation. Take salmon in the Fraser river, rather than something you cannot see.

"I never made a dollar in mining stocks in my life," he said. "I have had mining shares a yard long, but they weren't worth the paper they were written on. I have made a little money out of real estate, because I had made a study of it, and knew exactly where I was at—but it's different with things you cannot see.

"The above little story simply illustrates what can happen to a man who neglects a business over which he is master, for one that he knows practically nothing about. Therefore, I would advise business men to be careful and to forget this 'get rich quick' idea unless the way is perfectly clear."

Weak Points Discovered by a Traveling Salesman

One Who Has Been Observant on the Road Suggests Where Improvements Could be Made—To Cut Prices on Same Article as Competitor is Bad Policy—How Careless Delivery Affects Custom—

In a recent conversation, a traveler, with many years of selling to grocers to look back on, gave some ideas and pointers well worth the serious consideration of any grocer wishing to find the weak points in his business organization.

"One of the most noticeable, yet most common, mistakes made by the average retailer is that of cutting his price on the same articles as his competitor," he said. "Don't draw attention to him in that way. It only advertises the fact that he made the reduction first, and you had to meet his price. Don't be afraid he will keep that 'too low' price. Prices must be kept up to a fairly even level the year round. Temporary changes may be made, but, eventually, back they come to normal. However, if you do want to meet that cut, lower your price on some other article, and, if advisable, have a special sale of two or three lines. That will show far better results than simply cutting on the same article, and after your competitor.

"So many grocers make a specialty of lines which yield a very small margin, such as sugar. A much better method would be to have each clerk in charge of one or two lines. Make it to his interest to push those lines by offering him a small percentage of the increased sales in that article over a certain amount, or in any other way it is thought best. But, at any rate, have each clerk interested in seeing that his line of stock is being turned over more quickly than any other in the store.

Winning Over a Customer.

"Just as an instance of what may be done by a clerk alive to the value of disposing of his own line: Mrs. A— tells him she doesn't need tea, as she buys from So-and-So. Immediately, if he does the wise thing, she is given a sample of a tea, of the grade usually bought by her, to take home. Now, it all comes back to the question so often asked: What grade of goods do you carry? Good enough, if submitted to the above test, to hold their own? It pays to have that kind, though they cost more money. If you can deliver the goods, you are not going to have such a hard fight to hold trade. To finish the foregoing example: At every opportune time the tea question is brought up by the clerk. Mrs. A— finally gives a trial order, is satisfied, and a tea customer is made.

"Now, whatever the line, with a good clerk pushing it, more of that particular line is bound to be sold.

"This brings up the question, What class of salesmen are most desirable? It pays to have the best, even if it necessitates your putting more in their pay-envelopes. People like to be waited on by a gentlemanly salesman—ladies do, especially. The best clerks need better treatment in the matter of salary, but it will be money in your pocket to have such men in your store.

Care in Delivering.

"Carelessness in delivery is responsible for many lost accounts. As an example, coal oil is among the articles ordered by one customer. The can is put in the wagon, along with bread, tea, and other things, and carried a mile to the customer's home. Theoretically, coal oil cans don't leak, but practically they nearly all do, at least, the odor leaks. As a result, the family decides the grocer has spilt kerosene on the tea or bread, as the case may be, and change their grocer. This is, of course, an extreme example, but it has happened many times.

"Another point regarding delivery is promptness. If a customer orders some cheese at five o'clock, to be delivered before six, it doesn't work up much to her enthusiasm for the grocer, or raise her opinion of his methods, if he neglects to deliver it until the next morning. It is, perhaps, an unusual happening, but at the same time a precedent has been established more than once.

"Potatoes or carrots may be all right as corks for kerosene cans, but when it comes to using them for molasses, or some other edible commodity, don't do it; you wouldn't like it yourself." remarked the traveler.

"I would advise a grocer to have a place for everything. Don't do as one firm I know in Montreal did, lose a whole case of chocolate Menier in their cellar—a case about three feet high, by the way. It seems incredible, but it is a fact, nevertheless. The case became so covered with excelsior, boxes and rubbish, that no one discovered it for over a year. Have system in your cellar, as well as upstairs. There is too much lost stock, anyway. Let some other fellow lose it.

"The neatness and general air of respectability which are necessary to the successful grocery, can only be obtained by constant care. Just a point here. Don't allow loafers around your store. They may be so happy you hate to disturb them, but let them land on someone e'se. Grocers don't want them. Usually they smoke the dirtiest pipes obtainable, expectorate wherever they may happen to be, and, generally, do things which grate on the feelings of ladies, particularly, and, in any retail grocery store, ladies form the larger proportion of customers. Sawdust on the floor is a point along this line. Don't have it. It is only put there to hide the dirt. Keep the floor swept, and your stock dusted, and there will be no necessity for it. Ladies do not like that, either. They pick their way over it, holding up their dresses, and before very long decide to go where it is cleaner, to do their buying.

Fixtures on Instalment Plan.

"There is no easier way for a grocer to put himself in a fair way towards bankruptcy than to start buying his show cases, scales, etc., on the weekly instalment plan. To begin with, they cost fully a third more when bought in that way, and, secondly, you can't begin to make that amount of interest on your money in the time it takes to pay for the articles. It amounts up fast if you are paying $5 a week on this, and $5 more on the other thing. Don't get into it. Three failures during the past year, to my personal knowledge, have been from buying everything on the instalment plan.

"Many grocers have a fair knowledge of their business to start with, but look at our English cousins. A boy is apprenticed in England for years, without pay, just learning the business. When he gets a store of his own, he knows the business. Here, nearly any one thinks, 'Oh, it is easy to run a grocery store, even if I can't run anything else.' There was never a bigger mistake. It takes business education, and plenty of it, to make a successful grocer. A grocer cannot know too much about his goods, his prices and his accounts. They all need continuous study. Take the buying of goods, for instance. How many grocers can actually tell various coffees apart, from looking at the beans, or judge accurately the values of dozens of other lines in the store? A traveler comes in, makes a sale of goods with a smooth line of talk, and, eventually, the grocer has dissatisfied customers. It is much better to deal with some reputable jobbing or manufacturing houses who cannot afford to lose a good customer by selling him inferior goods. When you feel certain of yourself, you will undoubtedly be able to save a little by getting the prices of other than your regular houses. Be sure you know how and what to buy though, before getting competitive prices, which may cause you to buy.

"Be sure you are selling your goods at a profit. Many a grocer takes no account of the 10 per cent. per year or more depreciation on all his store ,fixtures and on the store itself. Figure up all your expenses before you put prices on your goods.

"One very insidious, and in cities, frequent, evil, is the deadbeat account. It applies to a more limited extent in small towns, but this advice is more to city grocers. Women who follow the profession of 'dead-beating,' start in with a grocer. The first month they, perhaps, pay up entirely, but after that they run behind more and more every month, always promising to pay in full 'in the near future.' Eventually, the grocer either fails, for these people all go to the point of least resistance, that is, to the grocer who doesn't put a stop to the practice immediately, or the people move away, leaving the poor grocer to 'whistle for his money.' In Montreal, for example, nearly all the grocers who fail, can show an almost identical list of names of the dead-beat accounts."

Women who are Making Good in Grocery Business

Two Peterboro Ladies Who Began in a Small Store Have Each Had to Seek Larger Premises — For Store Cleanliness and Courteous Treatment They Surpass the Merchants of the Other Sex—Do Their Own Buying, and Bookkeeping.

By Harry Theobald.

By a seemingly strange turn of affairs two women who are meeting with success in the grocery business in Peterboro, commenced in the same store. A struggle, to solve the situation, to become acquainted with the first principles and then a departure to larger and brighter stores to build up staunch businesses for themselves in different parts of the city, has been their records.

Mrs. Ed. Harris and Mrs. S. Mitchell are these two women who, although limited in experience when compared with other grocers, they may, nevertheless, look upon their venture into the world of trade with considerable satisfaction.

Mrs. Harris entered the grocery business in a small shop at the corner of Sherbrooke and George Street, about eight years ago. To-day she has a fine store of her own in the south end of the city in a location where competition is not too keen, and where she is assured of a good business. Mrs. Mitchell succeeded Mrs. Harris in the George St. store several years ago and now occupies a larger and better place at the corner of Reid and Sherbrooke Sts. Mrs. Harris entered the business to secure a livelihood after her husband's death. When she decided to move, her friend Mrs. Mitchell heard of her intentions and determined to try her hand in the corner grocery. Her husband may have objected at first, but Mrs. Mitchell displayed a keen insight into business methods from the beginning and together with good judgment and a winning disposition her clientele rapidly increased.

Studied Work of Others.

To get the ideas of others, Mrs. Mitchell became a reader of The Canadian Grocer, which gave her access to many of the "tricks" of the trade. In her new store she carries a complete line of groceries and also handles confections and, in the summer, ice cream, acting as the agent of an up-town confectioner. Neatness and cleanliness predominate.

Mrs. Mitchell aims at keeping her shelves piled orderly, believing this to be a detail that immediately catches the eye of the person entering and it creates a favorable impression. She is also a believer in window decorating and in frequent changes in the articles shown. Mrs. Mitchell strives to please her customers by courteous treatment and by offering prices equal to those of the uptown grocers. She is "full of business" as the saying is, and personally attends to the buying of her stock, the book-keeping, and all the other details. Since moving to her new store she has found it necessary to have an assistant and in Miss Ethel Hunter she was fortunate in securing a young lady who has had some experience in the grocery business. These two ladies maintain the store in a thoroughly capable manner, and in the neatness that is discernible on every hand one would be safe in saying that they are doing better than a man would in those premises.

Prairie Farm Store. In the Background are the Stables in which Customers' Teams are kept Free of Charge.

The Idealistic General Store of a Practical Dreamer

Establishment Reared by George E. Scott at Prairie Farm, Wisconsin, is a Gem of Architectural Beauty—Exceptional Accommodation for Customers and Clerks —Grounds Very Beautifully Laid out—How He Overcame Mail-order Competition.

A department store in a country town of but 350 people, conducted along the same lines as those of the larger cities and, in addition, a gem of architectural beauty, not only confers a distinction upon that town, but evinces wonderful enterprise on the part of the man who conducts it.

Such, however, is the store of George E. Scott, in Prairie Farm, Wisconsin. This store is the fulfillment of a long-cherished dream on the part of Mr. Scott, and the realization of the dream in such substantial and beautiful form is destined to make him one of the famous merchants of the country.

The building was erected five years ago, at a cost of $30,000. The general design was copied after one of those old Spanish missions still found in southern California. It is two storey and basement, 80 x 110, with a balcony in the rear on first floor, and is beautifully situated in the centre of a three-acre block of land, which is laid out in driveways, walks, and decorated with shrubbery and flowers. It is built of solid brick, trimmed with Dunville stone, heated by steam, brilliantly illuminated by a gasoline plant, and is supplied with hot and cold water.

Modern Equipment.

The interior is a model in design, being finished in red birch throughout, and has a handsome steel ceiling. It is provided with all modern fixtures for displaying goods, elegantly lighted from large windows, and is conveniently arranged in every way. It is equipped with a large fireproof vault, freight elevator, cash carrier system and adequate fire protection, and the private offices are beautifully finished and furnished, being ideal, attractive and very convenient.

A reading and rest room for the accommodation and comfort of women customers has also been fitted up. It is equipped with couches, easy chairs, reading matter, etc., and there is a toilet room in connection. What this rest room means to women who have traveled many miles need not be told. Even the babies have not been neglected, as high chairs can also be found in this room.

The men have been provided for, too, but in a less lavish manner. Instead of having hitching posts in front of the store, a large shed has been built in the rear, where farmers who have traveled long distances may place their teams, secure from the wind. Near the shed is a grist mill, and a large warehouse, in which are displayed and stored vehicles and all kinds of farm implements and machinery. Mr. Scott also operates a planing mill, and carries a stock of lumber and building material.

The stock carried comprises complete lines of dry goods, groceries, clothing, men's furnishings, crockery and glassware, drugs, furniture, hardware and tinware, stoves, paints and oils, harness and saddlery, toys, etc., and an undertaking business is conducted in connection with the store The goods are displayed and sold on the main floor and balcony, the basement and second floor being used for storage purposes.

Arrangement of Departments.

All the departments are arranged in tasty style and present a neat and handsome apeparance. That the dust cloth and scrub brush are liberally used is very apparent.

Seven clerks are employed and two teams are used for the purpose of hauling supplies from Ridgeland, the nearest railroad station. The store is kept open from 7.00 a.m. until 6.30 p.m., except on Wednesdays and Saturdays, when it is open until eight o'clock, no business being transacted on Sundays.

Does it not seem a rather out-of-the-way place for such a luxurious country store, seven miles from the railroad, in the very heart of a farming district, and nary a big town within many, many miles? That's what the croakers thought as the store took shape. They said that Scott was a fool for wasting his money on a building like that. Why, they said, he will have it so nice that the farmers will think it above them and will not trade there.

But Mr. Scott had confidence and was determined to succeed, in fact, he is a man who radiates success. His very action says, "I've made good." He has a taking way with him. Men like him, and women do, too. He is a man who gets liked by taking an interest in the welfare of others.

When you meet a man who has a firm handclasp, a ready smile, a face that is frank and open, and invites confidence, brightened by eyes that look squarely into yours, you have met good fortune. There are mighty few of those kind of fellows scattered around where they can be reached every day. But in Mr. Scott all these characteristics can be found, and they have no doubt figured very prominently in making for him the success which he has now achieved. When a merchant can turn his stock of $20,000 two and one-half times a year in a small village like Prairie Farm, Wisconsin, he certainly must have some wonderful trade-pulling powers.

With but the experience of an ordinary clerk Mr. Scott happened into Prairie Farm in 1883, and secured a position as clerk with Knapp, Stout & Co., who conducted a small general store there at that time. He worked for this concern a number of years, he became acquainted with everybody, was liked, and decided to stay. In the course of time he bought the business, as many other clerks have done, who worked hard and played the game right. By his ingenious methods and striking personality, he not only kept the old trade, but secured new. He then settled down as a family man and built what is to-day considered one of the finest residences in that town. As time went on and business flourished he conceived the idea that a larger and better equipped store would be necessary in order to handle the continually increasing business, and after planning and dreaming, and consulting with his clerks, plans were finally completed for the erection of the beautiful store building which now stands in the centre of the little village of Prairie Farm, as a monument of unusual progress and success.

Mr. Scott now caters to a population of 5,000 people within a radius of from seven to ten miles of his store. His sales amount to about $50,000 a year, 70 per cent. of which are for cash, and the balance on short time credit. The community is very prosperous, dairying being the chief industry, and Mr. Scott says he has little difficulty in making collections .

In a recent interview, Mr. Scott said: "I am doing more business now than ever before, and it is therefore a financial success. But that success cannot be compared with the knowledge that I have realized my dream, redeemed my belief in my friends, the farmers, that they would appreciate the best, and taught to the merchants of the country a lesson. I have letters from every part of the United States in regard to my store. Many congratulate me; many seek information.

"But the one thing that we have demonstrated up here is that the competition of the mail-order house and the stores in the big cities can be overcome only by providing in the country the balancing conveniences. The people want the very best, and they are going to get it one way or another.

"And they know how to act in good surroundings, too. I was told that the farmers would be kept away by the spotless appearance of the store. You know, I have the floors kept just as clean and spotless as ever a woman's kitchen was. And in the five years the store has been up only one man ever spat on the floor, and he was intoxicated. This incident happened at one of our annual gatherings, when the employes are gathered for some good talks and good things to eat. One of the clerks told me that this man, after spitting on the floor, without anyone saying a word to him, took his handkerchief and wiped it up.

"Not a word have any clerks or myself ever said to keep people from doing what they please. It is their store. Their money built it. I want them to know that it is theirs."

And perhaps it is just that air about the place that makes it so delightful to all.

UNITED CANNERS ASSOCIATION.

New Company Formed in Manitoba to Take Over Canadian Factories.

The United Canners' Association has recently been incorporated in Manitoba for the purpose of taking over the interests of several canning factories and distributing their products in Western Canada.

The company proposes to ship direct from the factories, options on three of which they have already secured, to a warehouse in Winnipeg. The O'Grady, Anderson Company, private bankers, are behind the scheme and they are holding a considerable portion of the stock. A prospectus has already been issued. For twenty years Mr. O'Grady was general-manager of the Northern Crown Bank, resigning from that position last fall on account of ill-health, and later he entered with Mr. Anderson into the private banking business.

The above is a reproduction of a photograph of Heinz Salesmen in Convention at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, from Sept. 6th to 9th. This was the first Canadian Convention in the interests of the "57 Varieties" and is the beginning of the development of a large selling force in Canada, as this Company are now manufacturing practically their complete line at Leamington, Ontario.

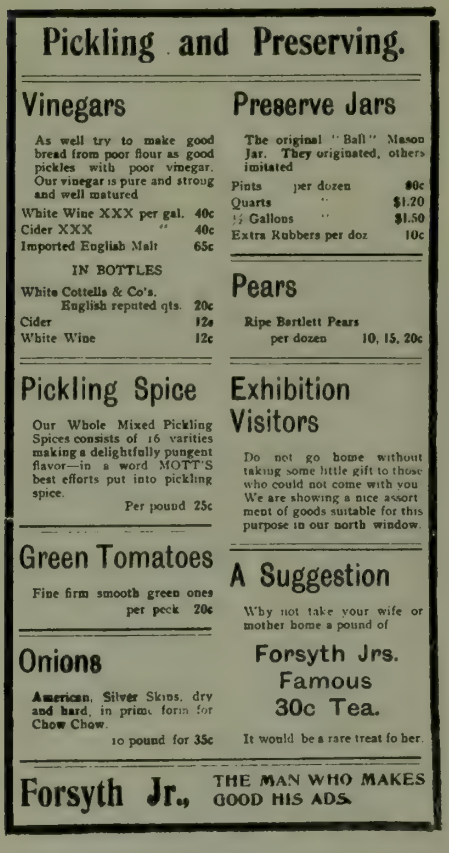
Good Advertising and its Great Possibilities

Sugestions on How to Write Copy That Directly Tends Towards Results—The Effect a Successful Advertisement Should Have on the Mind of the Purchaser—Criticisms of Ads. Written by Canadian Grocers with Improvements Suggested.

By W. F. Ralph.



"Advertising does not jerk—it pulls. It begins very gently, but the pull is steady, it increases day by day and year by year until it exerts an irresistible power."—John Wanamaker.

Everybody knows of John Wanamaker, and that his great success in the mercantile world was accomplished largely by the use of advertising. No wonder he lauds advertising!

Anything that John Wanamaker has to say on the subject of advertising, you can take for granted as being well worth attention. And in the above quotation he advocates persistence in advertising. He says that the "pull" of advertising increases infallibly if one keeps at it. And he knows.

There are some merchants in this broad Dominion (they are decreasing in number every day) who hold that advertising doesn't pay. And they base their opinion upon the fact of having tried it. A man might try to learn to swim by removing his clothes and waddling around for a few minutes in some shallow water. But he never could learn that way—he must go right in earnestly. So with advertising. A man must go in for it earnestly. Occasional insertions of a few badly prepared advertisements in the newspaper are no tests of advertising. That isn't giving advertising a fair show.

This fact is pretty generally understood now-a-days. The average grocer of to-day realizes that advertising has proven itself to be the stepping stone by which hundreds of his fellow merchants are climbing to success. And he generally realizes also that persistence is the very essence of advertising. On that account it is unnecessary to dwell further upon this phase of the subject.

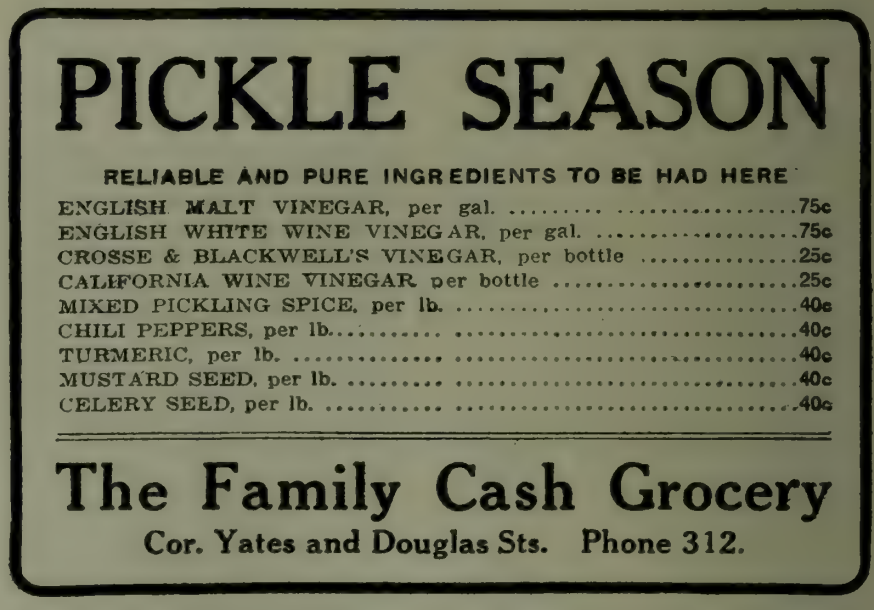
Forsyth Jr., THE MAN WHO MAKES GOOD HIS ADS.



An Ad. Written by Forsyth, Jr., Dartmouth, N. S. This has been Reduced from Double Column and 8½ inches long Essentials of Advertising.

The problem that is agitating progressive merchants in these days is, how to advertise. In a nutshell, the solution of the problem is:—"Tell the people what you have to sell and what you want them to pay for it."

With this answer constantly before him, never beclouded by the wealth of detail necessary to the accomplishment of advertising, a merchant will find that advertising is a simple proposition.

It is held by the majority of professional advertising men as an axiom, that the writing of a successful advertisement depends upon these four things: the attracting of attention; the awakening of interest; the holding of interest; and the persuasion to action. A moment's reflection will convince you that if an advertisement attracts attention, awakens and holds interest and persuades the reader to act on the suggestion it contains, its success is certain. And so it is.

Reproduction of a Newspaper Advertisement in the Pickle Season.

If an advertiser will subject his advertisements to an examination as to how far they accomplish these four objects before sending them to the printer and re-writing them until they conform to such requirements, his advertising, if placed in a proper medium, is certain to produce results.

There are some facsimilies of advertisements by several grocers accompany this article that we shall judge by the four principles above mentioned. Let us see how far they comply with the requirements of good advertising.

Criticism of a Pickle Ad.

Consider the "Family Cash Grocery" ad. It is typical of a great many grocery advertisements. We may grant that it attracts attention by the neatness of its set-up. The typesetter has done his best and has followed the good rule of using display type sparingly; with the result that the headline "Pickle Season," though laconic, stands out boldly and appeals to women whose minds, at this time of the year, are probably turned pickleward. So far so good; it will attract a certain amount of attention, provided it is not placed in close proximity to any advertising which contains more "ginger." It may be said to comply, in a moderate degree, with the first requirement of a good ad. But can we truthfully say that it either excites or holds interest? Can we say that there is anything persuasive in it? No, it is evident that this ad. does not contain any particularly interesting pickle information and that there is nothing so persuasive about it that it would be liable to urge the women to deal at the Family Cash Grocery in preference to any other store—unless the prices mentioned are below those demanded elsewhere.

While we are in pickles, so to speak, let us examine another pickle ad.; that of Forsyth, Junior.

Forsyth, Jr., is noted for his readable advertisements, and justly so. This says it well. While lacking a little in the first requirement of a good ad, it makes a pretty good showing on the other three heads. It is interesting; the language is delightfully conversational. It sounds like a man of genial disposition talking over the counter. It not only enumerates some of the articles required in the making of pickles, but it says something about the particular line of goods the advertiser sells. Look at the pickling goods advertisement of his is not up to his usual standard, although it is away above the generality of grocery ads. It lacks neatness. Its set-up could easily be improved. Nevertheless, it is a good ad. It says something and onion paragraph—there's suggestion in it: "American, Silver Skins, dry and hard, in prime form for chow-chow." With but the same materials to work upon as had the writer of the "Family Cash Grocery" ad., Forsyth, Jr., has turned out an advertisement that can be read with interest and that is written in a persuasive style that is far more liable to switch trade his way than would a mere list of vinegar and spices.

No. 1.—Mercer Ad.—The Original Used in the Newspaper.

Some Improvements Sugested.

Another ad. that is lacking a good deal in the essentials of effective advertising is the "E. Mercer" ad. The headline "We have in stock" though set in large and readable type does not sound particularly attractive. Granting that, by its size, it attracts a certain amount of attention, can the information that—Green Peas, etc.,—be called interesting? Is it not safe to assume that the average reader of a newspaper thinks that green peas etc., as listed, generally are carried in stock by grocers? Is there anything persuasive in: "Try our Hams and Bacon, best in the city. Send a trial order. Quality the best. Price as cheap as the cheapest?" If the advertiser's hams and bacon are the best in the city and his prices as cheap as the cheapest, surely it would be better policy to say why the ham and bacon is superior to others and just what the prices are. The public likes information, and will read it if it is given interestingly. But seldom does a mere assertion—even of a fact—convince the public.

The Mercer ad. No. 2 is suggested as being somewhat improved all round.

Write Copy Carefully.

The Geo. A. McCullough & Co., ad. seems to indicate that the writer of it could produce some very good advertising if he put himself to it. It also seems to indicate that in this particular instance the writer has not put himself into it, and has consequently failed to make the most of the splendid opportunity afforded by a large space on the front page of a newspaper and the presence of a good stock in his store to talk about.

Ad-Writer Must Understand His Own Customers

So Maintains Hamilton Retail Grocer, Who Says Advertising is Absolutely Necessary to His Business — Doesn't Think an Ad.-writing Expert Could Fill the Bill for Him—He gets Direct Returns.

"Most direct returns," is the way Wm. Carroll, a Hamilton retail grocer characterises the results of his advertising in the Hamilton papers.

"It is a thing absolutely necessary to my mind," he replied to a recent query. "I use space in three papers. My ads. occupy spaces two-column in width, and about 14 inches long." (The one reproduced was exactly that size.) "I try to get them in a good position, as near to the centre of the page as possible. I try to give good talks, but I make prices the feature."

Mr. Carroll is of the opinion that only a man who is in touch with the customers to whom he wishes to sell can write ads. that will appeal to them.

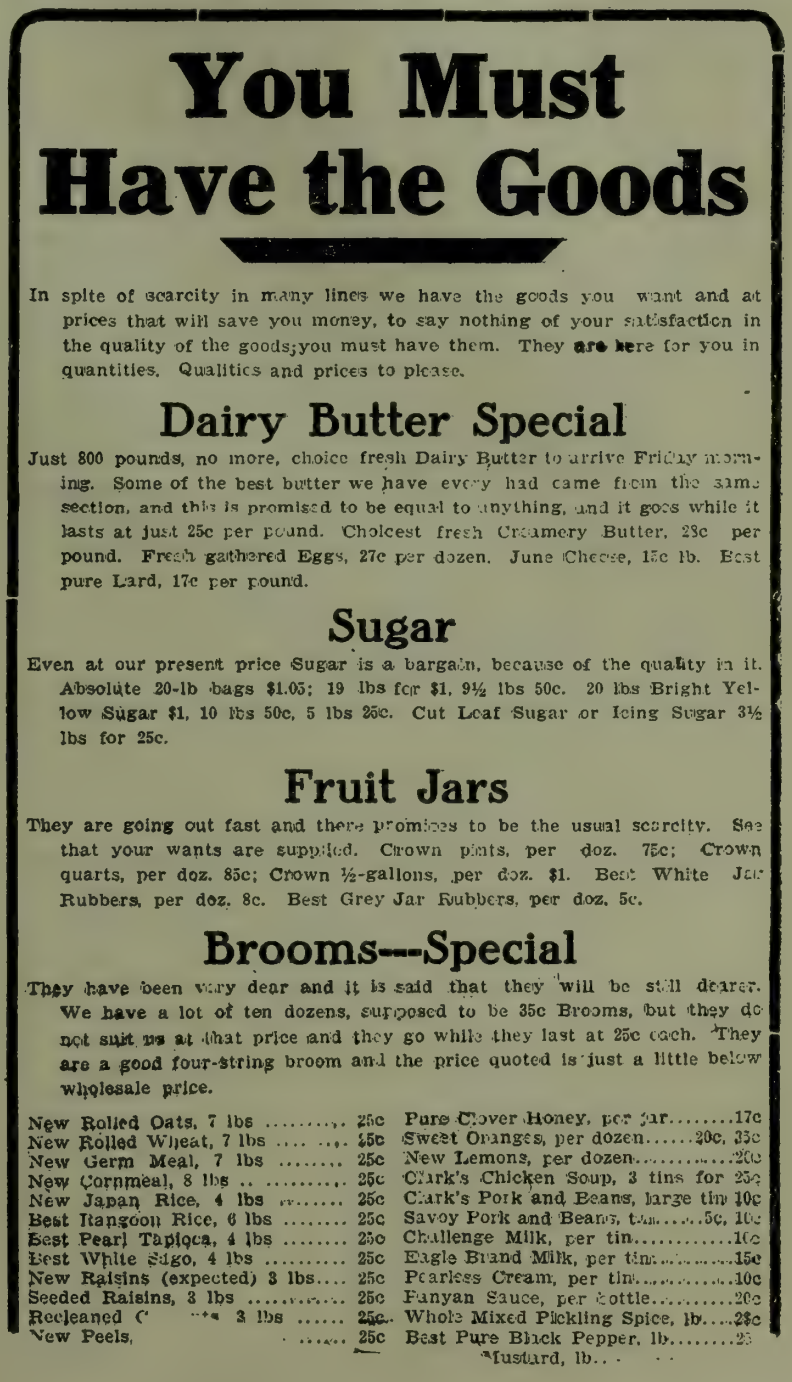
"He has got to see things from both sides of the counter. He should see the customers, and see how they are waited upon by the clerks, and know their inclinations and tendencies.

"No expert ad. writer can write ads. to sell the goods in a retail store, like the man who has had experience with the people who are going to buy. The one who will produce results is the one who is thoroughly acquainted with the field," he says.

Young Ladies Energetic.

Mr. Carroll is the proprietor of five grocery stores in Hamilton. One of these stores is run by two young ladies, whose work he is proud of. Last year they did a business of $32,000. The store in which they are employed is probably the best equipped and handsomest of the five. It was overhauled last November, but during the time of repairs, the young ladies kept up their average of about $600 per week.

Prices Very Important.



Advertising in the newspapers, Mr. Carroll claims, has been largely responsible for his extensive custom. He takes great pains in preparing his own copy, simply, as pointed out above, because he wants to talk to his own customers. He wouldn't write an ad. without including prices, and he makes the talks and prices harmonize so that direct results follow. He believes in giving the reasons, so far as possible, why he gives the prices. The liberal space his ads. occupy in the newspapers indicates how much he considers the value of advertising.

Mr. Carroll's finances are carefully watched. Every Monday he has a man out collecting, and he estimates that 99 per cent of his business is practically cash. His store equipments are modern and up-to-date, including cash-registers, computing scales, electric coffee mill, etc.

His trade is extending, because he does regular and judicious advertising.

A SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

John Walmsley, managing partner of the Old Homestead Canning Co., Picton, Ont., was the unfortunate victim of a serious accident last week. A large traveling hook struck him in the face, putting out one eye and seriously injuring the other. It is feared he will lose the sight of both. Mr. Walmsley has been taken to the hospital in Kingston.

The Monthly Discounts Almost Paid Expenses

Value to the Merchant of Settling His Accounts within the Discount Time Limit—Advantage Looks Small But When Turnover is Large it means Considerable.

By L. C. Harkness.

Two young men opened a general store in one of our western Canadian towns a few years ago and from the first day have endeavored to pay cash for their goods—that is thirty day payments; today they attribute the fact that they are in business to the extent that they have carried out this policy.

In paying cash for goods advantage is always taken of the discounts allowed by manufacturers. Now, of course, this discount is given for the benefit of the creditor, and because it is so the merchant does not at first see that there is any benefit to the debtor to be derived from the policy. The discount, except it be to those on the jobbers' list, is not usually above five per cent. and more often it is only three or less per cent., so the merchant naturally thinks that the reduction is not large enough to warrant prompt payment, since the money so used may sometimes be put to more profitable investments. As a consequence the creditor is held off, and the merchant buys stintingly for immediate shipments, and payments are made in three, six and sometimes twelve months. Now the merchant who accepts such methods as ideal is working along lines directly opposed to successful business principles.

Turn-over the Thing.

The merchant, it is allowed, needs money in his business. And the only way to get the money is in turning over the stock. The turn-over must be the aim of the grocer, and the larger the turn-over the greater will be the capital in the business. In order, however, to have a large turn-over, it seems to me, that it is necessary to buy in large quantities, so the question really resolves itself into how to buy in large quantities. The discounts given by wholesalers and manufacturers are not only an inducement to pay promptly but to buy in larger quantities. Now does the discount help the merchant to buy in larger quantities so that he may increase his turn-over?

This is certainly true, and it is the point which many dealers fail to recognize and take advantage of.

Every grocer must know that there are times in his business when the psychological moment must be struck in pushing off certain lines of goods. And almost every line has its season of movement. Now, for instance, we will mention canned tomatoes. When the time is ripe for the rapid movement of these goods would it not be to the retailer's interest to have a large stock on hand? If he did not have a large stock he could not afford to give attention to this line in an exclusive sense but would be worrying about the sale and turn-over of goods which are not in season and in which the demand is dull. In the rapid moving goods that are pushed in season the money is realized quickly and payments can be made easily within the cash period, and the quantity is so large that the discount means hundreds of dollars in some cases.

Maintained By Discounts.

The discounts thus acquired may then be used to pay off other goods and this is taking a double advantage of the system. So we see that the turn-over which is the great asset of the business is greatly facilitated and practically maintained by means of discounts.

When the merchant takes advantage of obtaining discounts wherever possible, his stock will be such as will enable him to adequately meet competition. Stocks will always be large and assorted. The general tone of the business will be brighter and healthier. In fact, the discount system forms the basis for the progressive, alert and prosperous retail business.

The discounts allowed the two young retailers referred to above were almost large enough to pay expenses each month. Does this mean anything to the average merchant?

AN OLD ADVERTISEMENT.

How Montreal Grocery House Used to Advertise in the Early Days.

An interesting relic of the old days in the grocery business was shown the writer recently when S. J. Mathewson, of Mathewson's Sons, Montreal, unearthed a copy of the Montreal Advertiser, a newspaper of the early days of the past century. In that publication, on June 3, 1834, there appeared the advertisement of Samuel Mathewson, the founder of the present house. According to his announcement he started on May 14, of that year.

Compared to modern wholesale grocery ads. that of Samuel Mathewson is indeed a unique one. No display was attempted, two inch single column space being used, and scarcely more than a mere statement of facts given.

Portions of the advertisement are worth repeating, as illustrating the style used by advertisers of those days in talking to their customers and probables.

The body of the advertisement begins: "The Subscriber begs leave to inform the inhabitants of Montreal and its vicinity, that he has OPENED a STORE in the above line, in the large New House adjoining Messrs. Carlton & Cook, St. Paul Street, near the Old Market—and has on hand a general assortment of TEAS, SUGARS, SPICES PICKLES, FRUITS——"

These goods he "offers to the Public, Wholesale and Retail, on very moderate terms; and from the selection of his Stock being of the best quality, he hopes that those who may favor him with a trial will derive satisfaction both in the price and quality of the articles."

The business of the house has been carried on ever since, but the warehouses and office of the firm are in another location. In the old days their premises were situated at the corner at the corner of St. Paul and St. Eloi Streets.

Expert Advice on Handling Crockery Department

Great Care Should be Exercised in Unpacking Goods—Suggestions for a Display Window—Do Not Advertise Too Many Lines at One Time—Get Novelties Every Week—Necessity of Buying Only What Can be Turned Over in a Reasonable Time.

"The crockery department of my store is one of the best paying investments I've got," remarked a retail merchant in a small maritime town recently.

He explained why. The important things to look after in the crockery business, he said, were buying the goods, unpacking them carefully, displaying them in the store, and advertising them judiciously.

"We carry crockery, pottery, chinaware and glassware because there is no exclusive china store in our village and because we find it a splendid addition to our grocery and confectionery business.

"It is something that if handled with care and nicely displayed will attract buyers of not only those particular goods but for others and will gain very often new customers for other departments.

"When a shipment arrives, I personally superintend its unpacking for I believe that money can be made by carefully handling the goods that come into the store. Occasionally a few articles are broken, but very seldom, and by using this special care I do not have those losses in breakage that some others have.

"I always keep one of my three show-windows for crockery, pottery, chinaware, etc., changing them regularly once a week. They are goods which always can be made to show up well, but some thought and study is necessary in order that the window will draw special attention."

These advices by the maritime merchant are valuable and should be studied carefully by the retailer.

Tray for Display Purposes.

Another merchant gives the following suggestion on dressing a window of fancy tea sets or small choice bits of pottery and glassware. Make a dainty tray by taking a piece of satin of any shade harmonious with the color scheme of the show window or room; place a small lace doily in the centre, and frame this in an oval gilt frame. (These frames can be found in any of the stores, sometimes with inexpensive pictures in then, for 25 cents). A piece of white linen with either the doily or an embroidered initial in the centre framed in a white linen enameled frame also makes a handsome tray. The glass is easily wiped off and the linen remains as spotless as before it was used. A piece of felt may be glued on the bottom of the tray, to prevent scratching or marring the table. A tea set, a handsome cut glass bowl or choice pieces of bric-a-brac displayed on this dainty setting cannot help but invite the closest scrutiny, and so possibly arouse the latent interest of the passerby, and so create a possible sale.

Advertising Chinaware.

The basic idea in retail advertising is to bring the people to the store to see the goods, and hence a strong ad. about one particular item is most apt to secure attention. The advertising of a stock of china and glass is a complex proposition at best. A safe rule used by the best advertisers is to play up a "leader" that is a genuine bargain, and let the salesmen and interior displays do the heavy work of converting the public to the same mind as they themselves are in. All women dearly love a "bargain" and to first attract them to the crockery department, a "bargain" proposition in the newspaper ad. is often what is needed.

One crockery advertiser who has had considerable success states that a definite policy is necessary. Get some distinct style and then stay by it, is his advice. A trade-mark invariably employed is recommended.

To obtain the same position for your advertising each time is also a great advantage. Be the first to show the new things in your line and don't fail to advertise them. Try and get novelties somehow every week at least. The public's desire for new things may not be explainable, but you must cater to it to obtain prestige for your store and, better than that, there's a bigger profit in the newest goods. Your advertisements can be made to read like a salesman's talk. The people want facts, not a lot of flowery language. Tell them what you have, give reasons why they should buy and name the price.

But get away from the old style of advertising that has done duty so long that people are weary of it. After a while you will enjoy writing ads., and anyway an ad. written just as you talk is sure to be noticed.

Overbuying Harmful.

It has been proven by the experience of many successful retail merchants that it is wise to proceed as if you did not intend to be in business more than a few months and to buy no more than you can easily turn over in that time. In import goods, of course, it is necessary to purchase a stock to last from six months to a year and to buy considerably in advance of the season. Import goods should, therefore, apparently be turned at a much higher profit percentage than domestic ware.

A retail china store proprietor who has made a conspicuous success of his business says that one of his cardinal beliefs was that given any average small retail business in which was embarked $8,000 to $20,000, it must earn 75 per cent. a year in gross profits on every dollar invested before net profits could be computed. He had made a prime feature of "exclusive control" on all his better goods.

SOAP IN HISTORY.

The Egyptians. Greeks, and more especially the Romans, we know, took great pains to preserve a clean body. The bath was a great institution in their day, when soap, as we know it, says the Lancet, was not in vogue, but oils and fragrant compounds were used to anoint the body. The references to "sope" in the Bible probably meant fuller's earth or wood or ashes or alkalies, and these were employed, generally speaking, not on the body, but for such operations as the cleansing of wine and oil casks or marble statues. The juice of certain plants which forms a lather was, however, employed for washing, and is still resorted to at the present day in certain localities. Though soap is not mentioned by Homer, who, however, refers to the use of cosmetics in the bath, Pliny distinctly describes a substance for beautifying the hair prepared from good tallow and the ashes of the beech tree.

Modern chemistry teaches us that soap is a true compound of fat (or fatty acid) with an alkali, and it is evident, therefore, that in Pliny's time soap was known which could not have differed very materially in composition from the modern product. As an industry, however, soap-making on any scale was not known until some time in the 17th century. From that period the manufacture increased enormously, but at first the demands were for rough cleansing purposes or for certain industrial operations, and not so much for the person. It is, indeed, probable that the soap of 100 or so years ago was not adapted for personal cleansing, owing to its too powerfully caustic and detergent properties acting harmfully on the skin.

Nowadays soap is manufactured which is so pure as to leave unscathed the most delicate skin, so beautifully balanced are the fatty and alkaline constituents. The huge proportions which the soap-making industry has attained are a strong indication that soap has become a necessity of modern life.

Gospel of Good Salesmanship in Retail Stores

Successful Salesman Must be Student of Human Nature—The Proper Time to Make Suggestions to Customers — Attention Should be Paid to Complaints—Be Clean and Keep the Store Clean.

By Stanley Nicholson.

A successful salesman is invariably an enthusiast. Enthusiasm is an essential characteristic of his make-up. He must believe in the goods that he is selling, and the firm for whom he is working. He has got to love his work if he would be a big success behind the counter. If a man loves his work, makes a study of it from his trade journals, from his employer and fellow clerks, and most of all from his experience with people, he will learn the fine points of his business. And in learning he will always find that the more he learns the more he has to learn.

Few people have the opportunity to study human nature afforded the man behind the counter in his daily work. There's a song to the effect that 'you never can tell about a woman.' It goes on to say that 'you never find two alike at any one time and never find one alike twice.' These are little things which are known to no one else as well as to the grocery clerk. He has to know the women that come to his store. He must remember their little peculiarities—what this one likes and doesn't like, and what that one likes and doesn't like. He must remember, that one woman always wants a certain kind of corn starch, or a certain brand of butter, and, though he can't see it just her way, he will when she's giving him an order—that is if he's a good salesman. In this respect he has to have his wits about him all the time, and often be very diplomatic in his work.

There are always those among the customers of any store, who think that the store is maintained only on the trade they bring it and that their orders are the only important ones. When and where it is possible, these people might as well be allowed to think so—it doesn't cost anything, and the successful salesman is diplomatic enough not to disillusionize them, if he can help it.

The Gentle Art of Suggestion.

An old adage says something about 'the gentle art of persuasion.' In referring to the tact required by a good grocery clerk it would be better to call it 'the gentle art of suggestion.' He can generally suggest to a customer, when it would often be folly to try to persuade. A good clerk will not try to persuade a woman to buy a bottle of olives, but he will make the suggestion to her and recommend them as the best obtainable.

"Here's something a lot of our best customers are demanding now, Mrs. ———," he can say. "It's new and there's nothing to beat it."

The lady doubtless thinks she is one of the best customers, and would like to buy it.

That's how suggestion works out to advantage, where persuasion would be entirely out of the question.

"I like to have the new things in our stock right here on the counter, where I can lay my hands on them at any time," said one of the best grocery salesmen in Guelph, when discussing with the writer some of the little tricks of his trade. "The articles themselves suggest themselves to the customer, while they wouldn't if back on the shelves. Then, too, I can show them so conveniently when I have them right here."

It's just at the stage when the customer is saying, "Let me see—I guess—yes, I think that will be all, thanks," that it is opportune to respectfully draw her attention to some seasonable delicacy, which the wise salesman has appetizingly displayed at close range right on the counter.

Lending an Ear to Complaints.

An appreciation, expressed by a customer, may be much more pleasant to the clerk than a complaint, but it should be listened to no more attentively. The good salesman will always lend an attentive ear to the complaints of his customers. If he does not listen, others may, and it's much better for him to know it, than for other people to take notice. If some brand of goods fails to give satisfaction, the clerk should report it to his employer promptly, and should, in the interests of his store, stop recommending it.

Quite often the importance of appearances is underestimated by otherwise careful salesmen, though, when one comes to think of it, a man should be more careful about his appearance when behind a grocery counter than in most other places. He should be clean and tidy, and, if possible, wear not only a white apron, but a white coat as well. Gentlemen won't receive friends in their homes in their shirt sleeves. Why should they do it in the store?

Until a few years ago hardly any of the grocery clerks in Guelph wore white jackets, but a man who had worked in a large city came back here and introduced it, and ever since then they have practically all worn them. The store that did it first was the first to get the favorable comment of the customers, however.

The store, as well as the salesman, should look clean and wholesome, and a good man will see that it does. It is difficult at rush times to keep things neat and clean and to have everything in its place, but it can be done, at least to a great extent. One very good plan is to have a scrap counter, where clerks, while busy, can put goods they have taken down to show to customers. If they always put such good on this counter they can always find them easily and replace them on the proper shelves after the rush time is over.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, advertise that they are quoting prices on 1909 pack canned goods, which will interest judicious buyers. They have in store now all the leading brands put up by Canadian packers, and can fill requirements immediately. Besides Canadian goods they are in receipt of their usual large shipments of "Le Soleil" brand imported canned goods. Prices on these are also of interest to the trade, and may be secured from the firm. Choice sea foods, all kinds, are now being shipped to grocers in every part of the country, by this firm. Their assortment is complete, and worth learning more about. They solicit inquiries, too, relative to their complete range of teas, every description. On another page they publish a list of their agencies, which will show the grocers what a large number of high-class lines they may secure from Laporte, Martin & Co.

G. E. Carveth, of Carveth & Co., Montreal, leaves for London, Eng., in November next, on a business trip to the factories which his firm represents throughout Canada. His firm represents the following English houses:—Lovatt & Lovatt, Langley Ware; The British Anchor Pottery Co., Ltd., Anchor Ware; The Pearl Pottery Co., Ltd., Tupie Ware; James Pearson, Ltd., Stone Bottles and jars; Isaac Sherwood & Son Ltd., Lamps, Burners, Etc.; New Pegamoid Ltd., Pegamoid Brand Leather Cloth; The Leather Cloth Co., Ltd., Crockett's Original Japanned Cloth.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

THE TRAVELER AND THE CLERK.

A wise traveler will cultivate the acquaintance of the clerks in the stores on which he calls. It is to his own direct advantage and to the advantage of the house for whom he works, to do so.

The letter which follows written by a traveler for Holbrooks, Limited, to his firm illustrates the necessity of treating clerks courteously:

> The following is an incident that happened to me, which may be of some interest to other salesmen on the road.
> I called upon a grocer this afternoon, and after a pleasant business chat, secured an order for two cases of Holbrook's Sauce. After thanking him for his order, and giving him a sample for his own use, I turned my attention to the clerks, gave them a sample each, told them what we were doing, and asked them for their co-operation. After I got through, the grocer called me back, and said that he was very pleased to see his clerks recognized by a salesman. He said, "I am the proprietor of this store, but I am no use to you apart from giving you an order. My clerks are the men who will sell your goods for you, not myself."
> He recalled an incident that happened during the time that he was a clerk in a retail store. A traveler used to come in and ask him in a gruff manner if the proprietor was in. He said that this traveler never had a pleasant word for him, because he supposed he was only the clerk, and naturally felt hurt about it. "To-day," he said, "I have a store of my own, and have a good business, and this same traveler wonders why I never give him an order, which I never shall."

This represents the effect that the lack of courtesy has upon clerks. It means that less interest will be taken by the salesmen behind the counters in the goods sold by travelers and is bound to have a bad effect when these clerks become proprietors themselves.

BETTER UNDERSTANDING NEEDED

The New York Journal of Commerce in a recent issue refers to a controversy in the United States metropolis which is causing considerable bitterness between jobber and retailer. According to the assertions of members of the trade, the trouble was caused by the eagerness of the jobber to sell to anyone, whether retailer or consumer, wherever there was the least opportunity to make a pretty good sale. Then the big retailer figured that he was a bigger factor of the trade than the small wholesaler and he went up higher to get his supplies.

The result is that there is a great bitterness of feeling existing which should not and it is to be hoped that the same condition of affairs will not become in evidence in Canada.

There should be a better understanding between wholesaler and retailer than there now is and it is certainly advisable that both should keep in touch with one another both socially and in a business way in order to bring about that better understanding.

One of the chief causes of wide differences is the practice of some jobbers selling to consumers. Such a practice ought to be done away with as soon as possible. Jobbers know that the retailer is a necessity in their business as a whole, and to take advantage by selling over their heads is unfair. The situation in New York should not be duplicated in Canada; it is contrary to general business principles and eliminates the smoothness that should exist.

BROOM-CORN STILL ADVANCING.

Latest advices indicate that there is no sign of the weakening of the broom-corn market. The crop is short in many of the States from which the supply is secured by broom manufacturers both in Canada and in the United States, and as a Chicago broker in writing to a Canadian manufacturer puts it, the market is liable to go up to 15 and 20 cents per pound. This would bring the price of broom corn from $85 to $300 and $400 per ton.

In Oklahoma state the crop was very short, being burnt up by excessive heat. In other states somewhat similar conditions exist and the farmers who see the price soaring are naturally reluctant about selling. This has prevented manufacturers from getting hold of the supplies they require and has a tendency to force the smaller factories which have been accustomed to purchase in small quantities out of business—at least temporarily.

At the present time, therefore, for anything like a decent broom the retail price will be from 50 cents up. The normal price was 35 cents. In fact manufacturers have had to eliminate some lines of broom altogether as they are not able to obtain the necessary material.

With no indications, therefore, of a weaker market in broom-corn, it is difficult to predict to what prices brooms may go before the situation is alleviated.

OFFSET CATALOGUE PRICES.

There are many ways and means to meet the mail-order house catalogues and wherever there is a possibility at all, advantage should be taken of it. If one can get possession of a catalogue, a careful study of it will usually place him in touch with something that will be of use in advertising. When the price can be beaten advertise that point. A New Brunswick grocer has hit upon that scheme, as the following advertisement shows:

> Have you been sending off for your garden seed? If so, you have paid more than double the price we charge for choice, guaranteed seed. Look up your catalogue and compare prices:
> | | Catalogue Price | My Price |
> |---|---|---|
> | Beet, per oz. | 10c | only 3c |
> | Cabbage, per oz. | 20c | only 8c |
> | Carrots, per oz. | 10c | only 6c |
> | Celery, per oz. | 35c | only 8c |
> | Cucumber, per oz. | 10c | only 5c |
> | Lettuce, per oz. | 10c | only 5c |
> | Watermelon, per oz. | 10c | only 3c |
> We put up all our garden seed ourselves and guarantee just as good seed as you can buy from any catalogue house. No trying necessary. We have sold the same way for ten years and have proven successful.

Needless to say this grocer sold the garden seed in that district. Besides doing that he started a feeling against the catalogue houses. It showed the people that they could buy at home cheaper than by mail and that they could obtain just as good a quality.

In hundreds of other cases this holds good. Watch the catalogues and demonstrate to your customers by presenting actual facts, that you can sell as cheap as, if not cheaper than they can buy from the mail order house.

AMENDMENT TO SECRET COMMISSIONS ACT

Some time ago The Canadian Grocer gave publicity to the new Secret Commissions Act which has created a good deal of interest and discussion all over Canada.

Since that time doubts have arisen in the minds of some that this act did not refer to ordinary business transactions but only to government business where secret commissions were given to members of the civil service. In fact, an "alleged" retailer conveyed a message by phone to the effect that the Act did not at all refer to business transactions between a wholesale and retail merchant. He had made investigations he claimed and had discovered that the Act only referred to transactions in the civil service, as it had been copied from an English act which was only intended for that purpose. He further promised to soon be able to prove that his contentions were correct but up to the present The Canadian Grocer has heard nothing more from him.

The Grocer pointed out to him at the time that the act was a copy of the English act and that it was introduced on account of the secret rebates exposed in the investigation of the marine department of the civil service in one of the provinces, for the purpose of preventing such occurrences in future, but, we understand, first passed in England to prevent buyers going to London getting a secret commission from the houses they bought from while in the employ of the houses for whom they bought.

Since that time The Grocer has made definite enquiries and has learned that the Secret Commissions Act refers to ordinary business transactions as well as to the civil service.

In reply to a query, the following letter from the Clerk of the Parliaments, Ottawa, gives a brief history of the bill:

"It was introduced into the Commons on 1st February, 1909. Passed by House of Commons, 23rd February; received by the Senate on 2nd March; amended by Senate on 24th March; returned to Senate with amendments agreed to 21st April; assented to 19th May."

The amendment referred to is the principal feature of the bill which makes it general in its application. It reads:

> Every person who is a party or knowingly privy to any offence under this act shall be guilty of such offence and shall be liable upon conviction to punishment hereinbefore provided for by this section.

This, according to the best of authorities makes the retail merchant just as liable as a traveler or wholesale house guilty of a breach of the act.

There is apparently, therefore, little truth in the assertion of the "retailer" that the Secret Commissions Act did not refer to him or to wholesale houses and their travelers.

CARELESSNESS THE CAUSE.

Our Canadian government might take a lesson from the prompt action of the New Zealand government in response to the complaints in England with regard to the excess of moisture in their butter. So anxious is New Zealand to retain and even increase its trade with England that it at once put effective machinery into operation by which the butter of every creamery is inspected, the interests of the purchasers safeguarded and the industry protected in general.

This action on the part of the government will commend itself to all purchasers of New Zealand butter. As their butter now sells in England on a par with Canadian butter, under much more trying shipping facilities, it would show conclusively that there is something lacking in the butter industry of our country. With the large amount of money spent in aiding the butter industry, there must be something wrong with the officials whose business it is to look after its interests. There is some excuse when Denmark commands 5 shillings per cwt. more but there is no excuse for our butter falling behind countries under more disadvantageous circumstances.

There is no getting away from the fact that there is still a great deal of carelessness connected with our dairy work.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST.

There is nothing more interesting at the present time among wholesalers and retailers alike than to follow the market conditions. The whole trade is bristling with features this week due to a combination of circumstances, which when each is revealed in detail, would form a suitable basis for a romance on the market.

There never was a time in the history of Western Canada when the future of the country was so fully assured than it is at this present moment. This statement is made in an absolute sincere way, and it will stand investigation. It may indeed invite investigation.

The west has a reputation founded on actual facts, and those facts are more in number and consequently the reputation is more creditable in the fall of 1909 that ever before. Optimism prevails in every phase of business life—oftimes not based upon that which merely appears, but that which actually exists. The whole west is enjoying "good times." Reactions such as have occurred in the past cannot occur again. Past experiences have checked the pace of wild speculation. The whole country is moving at a slower, but a vastly surer pace. The resources of the territory have now become so well developed that the variety of industrial pursuits has tended to diminish the tension placed upon any single resource.

The harvest of 1909 is all gathered in. Money is passing freely from the manufacturer to the farmer, on to the consumer, then to the wholesaler and thus back to the manufacturer.

NEED OF TRADE ORGANIZATION.

One of the most important questions for retail merchants of Canada to consider at the present time is organization. They must see that individually they cannot cope with the dangers that threaten the commercial interests, and the proper and businesslike method to follow is to drop all their prejudices, meet together and determine the best means of protecting their rights in order to conserve the true system of trade and commerce. While associations of various kinds have been organized and are doing splendid work, it is however a lamentable fact that still a great many retail merchants are taking no interest in them, pay nothing towards their support, and who scarcely spend a dollar for a trade paper in order to find out in what condition the trade is.

This has been going on for some years, and it is through this apathy on the merchant's part that the mail order houses have gained such a tremendous trade which naturally belongs to the towns and villages all over our country.

Will the merchants stand with their hands folded any longer and allow their trade and their towns to suffer because some strong concerns are leading the people away from their own interests and make no attempt to save the situation? Where a merchant has an opportunity to jump on an insignificant peddler who does not sell as much in a year as is sold in half a day by a mail-order house, he acts promptly and with a good deal of authority to defend his rights against the encroachments of that peddler. But where it requires united action on the part of the merchants to combat against the inroads of these institutions, they simply, without much protest if any at all, allow them to supply their customers with their needs. They get the money without paying one cent to the various municipalities.

There are only two things which can possibly stand in the way of a proper organization that could effectively regulate trade affairs. The one is prejudice against brother retailers and the other is the cost.

No one has ever yet been able to prove that any merchant has gained anything in any shape or form through spite or prejudice, and therefore only the short-sighted would allow that to stand in the way. The only obstacle then can be the cost. Considering a merchant's annual expenses, the fee for becoming an active member of the Retail Merchants' Association is insignificant.

Association work can no longer be considered as a fad, but as an absolute necessity and it should be the duty of every merchant to support it. If the association is not doing the work which is expected from it, there is no one to blame but the merchants themselves. They have the power in their own hands to appoint their officers, and to see that they efficiently perform their respective duties.

If nothing more had been accomplished through organization work than the defeat of the co-operative bill which threatened the destruction of the retail trade, no merchant should ever refuse to pay his annual fees if nothing else were ever done. However, the interests of the retail trade require constant and watchful attention. The retailers need the Criminal Code amended as well as the Peddlers' Licence Act, the Weights and Measures Act and the Division Court Act.

This can all be accomplished through united effort which means organization, and it cannot be done in any other way. If this is the case then why should any merchant refuse to do his share? Is any merchant so small that he would benefit through this work without being willing to pay his honest share? Surely not. Therefore every merchant should make up his mind that the support of association work is as much a part of his annual expenses as the paying of his taxes.

NEW ERA IN GRAND TRUNK AFFAIRS.

The importance of the change in the presidency of the Grand Trunk Railway, does not lie in the mere fact that Chas. M. Hays succeeds Sir Rivers-Wilson, but in the fact that it marks a distinctly new era in the administrative affairs of the railway.

Of all the great railway systems on this continent the administration of that of the Grand Trunk Railway has probably been the most unsuccessful, in spite of the fact that it ran though the oldest and best settled parts of Canada. The cause of this was unquestionably the fact that the executive head resided in Great Britain and not in Canada.

To be compelled to signal across the ocean before any important move could be made was not conducive either to the interests of the bond holders in Great Britain or those of the business men and others in Canada who were concerned in the Grand Trunk System. There has been a decided improvement of late years in this respect, but the best results certainly could not be obtained with the executive head 3,000 miles away, and who only came to Canada at periods of long intervals.

No ordinary business could be successfully run under such conditions, and a railway is just as much a business enterprise as that which sells merchandise.

Under the new order of things we may shortly expect something doing. Mr. Hays is a man who does things and knows what a railway should be in order to render efficient service to its clients, earn dividends for its shareholders, and interest for its bond holders.

It is to be hoped that under the new order of things benefits will accrue to all concerned: to the business men in Canada and to the bondholders and shareholders of the company.

The directors of the Grand Trunk are to be congratulated on at last having eyes with which they can see.

SELL WHOLE-HEARTEDLY.

Do you really believe that you pay sufficient attention to the art of salesmanship in your daily transactions?

Too many merchants take it for granted that their customers come into the store to purchase certain things, and when supplied with those articles or their equivalent, there is no necessity for any further effort to sell some other commodity.

A writer who takes a keen interest in the art of salesmanship as practised by the retail merchants, states in an exchange, that he has been making trips to various stores in his home city recently, buying small articles, one at a place, solely for the purpose of studying the methods of salesmen. They are pitifully wanting. In ten stores visited only one salesman made any real, whole-hearted effort to sell goods not asked for. We did not resist his blandishments, but bought several additional articles. By eight of the others the article requested was produced and wrapped up, the change given, and that ended the transaction. In the ninth the salesman inquired in a perfunctory manner, "Is there anything more?" There is need for a stirring up in stores among the salesmen. This is not the way to make a record as a clerk, nor is it the way which leads to promotion and independence. Not one of the ten was rude or discourteous. Not one showed neglect. But only one made a real effort to interest the buyer in other goods. He did it in an intelligent manner.

POOR SALESMANSHIP.

A richly dressed woman entered a Toronto store recently and asked one of the clerks to show her a chafing dish, to which the clerk responded, "about how much did you want to pay for a chafing dish, Madam?"

"That doesn't make any difference," curtly retorted the lady, with a toss of the head.

How often we find clerks asking prospective customers, "how much did you want to pay?"

Unquestionably it would greatly facilitate the clerk's labors if he or she knew about how much the customer cared to invest. But cannot this usually be found out without asking the abrupt question? And does the customer always know before looking at the goods just what she does want to invest? And if she does know, does she care to tell?

Evidently in the case cited, the customer very strongly objected to telling, and really felt that it was something of an insult to be asked such a question, presuming that the clerk would suppose that the price cut little figure with her, just so she was suited.

ANNUAL FALL NUMBER.

With this issue The Canadian Grocer presents to its readers the annual autumn number of 1909. Especial care has been taken to secure articles from the best sources which will aid the retailer in his daily business life and it is to the interest of every member of the retail trade that the number be carefully read from cover to cover.

The cover design has been prepared with especial care. It suggests "Ye Olde Time Grocer," with the old time styles of doing business and serves as a great contrast to the grocery stores of the present day with their modernized methods and up-to-date grocers.

The writers who have contributed to this number invite criticism; by this means problems affecting the trade can be more definitely solved and a better understanding will be the result.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—10c lower.
Teas—Market high and firm.
Coffee—Probable temporary advance.
Dried Fruits—New goods arriving.

Montreal, Oct. 14, 1909.

The 10c lowering in sugars took place too late for last week's issue. It is caused by local competition and is not expected to last long, it is thought, as the raw material is going up all the time.

The tea market is clear of Japans, but it is expected that some of the low and medium grades will arrive shortly. There seems little doubt that they will be snapped up on arrival.

A few new figs and dates have appeared, and the quality seems better than usual for first arrivals.

The coffee situation is rousing interest at present. It is thought that only speculation could cause the recent increase in the primary prices of Santos and Rio coffees, considering the extra large crop this year.

From this, coffee men think the rise will not be permanent enough to affect the retail trade.

A few early evaporated apples have appeared, but the quality is not up to required standards as yet.

Canned goods, particularly peas, corn and tomatoes, are interesting the trade just at present. Dealers will only sell in small quantities, as advances are expected in all three lines, owing to the small pack.

As a whole the market shows more strength than last week and presents more interesting features. In certain lines dealers are afraid to venture any predictions as to eventual prices, owing to apparent contradictions between the present situation and present prices.

SUGAR—All sugar declined 10c on Oct. 7th, just too late to change our quotations last week. They remain firm at the new prices, and no further changes are expected in the near future. The cause of the decline was local competition. A curious fact regarding this decline is that raw sugars are all rising.

COFFEE—Coffees, particularly Santos and Rio, have risen ⅜ to ½ cent in the primary markets. There is no reason for this, except speculation, in which case the change is only temporary. The crop is large this year and prices should naturally be lower, or at least no higher. Up to date the crop has produced much more than last year for the same period.

In fact, all spices are having a tendency upward.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Decline of 10 cents.
Evaporated Apples—Good Demand.
Canned Goods—Firm markets.

Toronto, Oct. 14, 1909.

The wholesale trade is beginning to feel the good effects of the great wheat crop in the northwest, and their orders from there are very satisfactory. With the best crop, all round, Canada has ever had, trade prospects are exceedingly bright and hopeful. Canned goods are likely to advance. Tea is firm. Evaporated apples are in good demand. Sugar is likely to recover its last week's drop. Beans will scarcely be able to hold their present price. All kinds of dried fruits are expected to be in stock in a few weeks.

SUGAR—The sugar market has taken a peculiar turn this week. While refined sugars have dropped 10 points, raw sugar has advanced. On the whole the market is firm with a good chance of moving upwards again. The sugar crop of Cuba is expected to reach a total of 1,600,000 tons.

MONTREAL—The demand for canned fruits and vegetables is very brisk, particularly for peas, corn and tomatoes. Prices on the latter two have risen slightly and dealers will only sell in small lots, owing to the expected future rise. MANITOBA MARKETS

Advances—Figs, cheese.
Firmer—Brooms, canned strawberries, dried fruits, shelled nuts.
Declines—Sugar, jams.
Weakness—Japan rice, cereals.
Withdrawals—Lunch tongue, evaporated apples.

Winnipeg, Oct. 14, 1909.

Wholesalers report considerable activity in their lines this week, and there is a lively air to the market situation. Advances and declines have been many during the past few days, and wholesalers are busy keeping their travelers informed as to prices, coupled with the fact that retailers are making strong demands just now in the attempt to lay in winter stocks. Also, canned goods are beginning to arrive, which line of goods forms a large portion of the fall trade, and gives the whole a lively aspect.

Collections are very good, in fact, exceedingly good, and the retailers' orders are such as to convince the wholesaler that he has more money in the bank.

SUGAR—We quote a decline of 10c per hundred in all sugars. The drop is occasioned, it is reported, by the manipulations on the New York market. The western output is heavy and has been all season.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS — The market is steadily becoming firmer on primes. Everybody is after them. In France, Germany and England the demand is strong. "Conditions in California are anything but satisfactory," says a broker. "They are having too much rain. Outside prunes are still on the trays. These rains necessitate stocking of trays and result in the fruit drying very slowly. The Santa Clara crop will not amount to seventy million pounds, which is at least thirty million pounds less than early estimates. We purchased a couple of cars a few days ago and were forced to pay more than we did a few weeks ago." Apricots and figs are also firm, and the whole list is on the advance. Valencia raisins will be higher. The crop is reported short, due to heavy rains in Spain. The quality of those that are on the market is good.

NUTS—Whole nuts will come in freely about the first of December for Christmas trade. The yield this season is large. The shelled market is firm, and prices are on the move up. The trade is better as winter approaches.

3-lb. picker, per bushel	2 40
Hand picked, per bushel	2 50

RICE AND TAPIOCA—A wholesaler stated to-day that rice was as low at present as ever before in western Canada. The cause is perhaps due to the fact that wholesalers stocked heavily before the advance in freight rates on May 15 last.

CANNED GOODS—On account of encouraging conditions in the west, the demand is better this year than usual. Prices on canned goods are lower than they have been for some years. The 1909 pack is not large. Some varieties are already becoming scarce, and consequently prices are likely to advance. Shipments of almost all varieties of salmon have arrived and the quality is good. Canners made preparations for a pack of 900,000 cases, but the run was a disappointment. The late run of sockeye was fair, but the quality was not as good as the first run.

The Power of the Trade Journal for Selling Work

The best advertising medium is the one which will so convey the right copy as to do the largest amount of selling work per dollar of cost. By selling work is meant work necessary to be done to produce sales.

The best possible buyer is not made an actual buyer at a single step.

It is one thing to win the buyer's favor for an article and another to make adjustments incident to closing the sale.

And, while the act of selling is in practice usually thought of as a simple unit, when we come to do the work by machinery it is found necessary to analyze the operations of the mind according to the laws of its action.

Buyers must be moved through several steps to be brought to the buying point.

They must have their attention attracted to the article. They must have their interest in it awakened. They must be informed as to its nature, utility and merits. They must be convinced of its value. They must be moved to action—to closing.

Broadly speaking, and thinking of buyers in the mass, is not each of these operations necessary, and does not each one require an expenditure of energy on the part of the seller?

Whatever moves buyers through one or more steps towards the buying point does necessary selling work.

The question is, how to do each one of these parts of the selling work so that the total result will be the largest possible sales at the least cost.

An advertisement may, for some products under some conditions, complete sales and make it possible to measure its total available selling work by the actual sales it makes.

Under other conditions, the advertising will bring inquiries, the following up of which will produce sales.

Under other conditions, advertising may be doing the most valuable kind of work without ever completing a sale, or bringing an inquiry. When ten thousand possible buyers are being worked upon, as much necessary selling work is being done in bringing half these prospects half way up to the buying point as in bringing half that number up to the buying point. And where a sale can only be half made by advertising it is still just as desirable to do that half in the most economical way.

It is difficult to measure the selling work done by advertising when its value is not at all indicated by sales, or even inquiries.

That is the reason why it is so difficult to judge of the value of the trade journal as a medium. Very many of the articles advertised are such, and the conditions of marketing are such, that by no possibility can the efficiency of a medium be judged by inquiries.

In many cases these very articles are such as to derive greatest advantage from the attention-attracting, interest-awakening, information-imparting facilities of the trade journal.

To judge of the value of the trade journal as an advertising medium, the real nature of selling work must be kept in mind.

To be sure, inquiries occasionally come from trade journal advertising which result in sales. But as valuable as these results are, they must, it seems to me, be regarded as incidental to the real selling work which every good advertisement is doing in every good trade medium all the time.

What is the secret of the strength of the trade paper? How can its steady and rapid growth for the past two decades be accounted for?

I believe this answer is to be found in the peculiarly strong appeal which the trade journal makes to its readers.

In the trade journal the reader meets the advertiser half way. The buyer takes the trade journal because he wants to read the advertisements as well as the text.

The reader seeks money-making information and suggestions in his trade paper. He is just as desirous of getting information about appliances and supplies which can be turned to profit as he is of getting other information from the editorial pages.

Drop the advertising pages from the trade journal and the circulation will drop. Improve the advertising pages and the circulation will increase.

The fact that the trade publisher gets ten times as much from advertisers as the general magazine is not due alone to the larger purchasing power of each subscriber. The trade journal automatically selects the people the advertiser needs to reach.

It reaches the right establishments, and the right man in each establishment. It is taken by the man who makes opinion for his own and other establishments, thinks for himself, takes the initiative and sets the pace in his line of business.

Your worth-while trade journal reaches the open-minded, alert and inquiring and is read by them when they are seeking information and suggestions to guide their actions.

The reader of the trade journal will meet the advertiser half way, because it is more to his interest to learn of good things than it is to the interest of the seller to have him.

The reader reads the advertisements to learn of things he can make money by buying.

Why does the reader study prices current of things he needs to buy?

Has he not the same incentive to learn of anything he can save or make money by buying?

Here is a relation between advertiser and reader which exists nowhere else.

When the advertiser puts himself in the reader's place, and gives the information he would want in like circumstances, the results are profitable and sure, even if not conspicuous.

When the advertiser gets this point of view, he will by text, illustration and display, enable the reader to get the maximum of useful information with the minimum of time and effort.

The trade journal reader has the same profit incentive to read advertising that the advertiser has to insert it.—Advertising and Selling.

By Sheer Force of Quality

Red Rose Tea in the Maritime Provinces is, and has been for many years, the leader. You know that its phenomenal progress in Ontario and the West has been the most remarkable feature of the tea trade for a decade. It has gained its position against keen competition, gained it by sheer force of quality—intrinsic worth. When it was first put on the market it was the best tea that had ever been sold at the price. To-day it is

The Best Tea Sold In Canada

This is a fact admitted by every independent judge of tea, admitted by every tea salesman who tries to sell a tea which he claims is "as good as Red Rose."
I have the same faith in good goods that I have always had. I have the same determination that shall be THE BEST. A tea without an equal.

Red Rose Tea

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Demand for Cured Meats Decreasing Somewhat—A Weakness in the Butter Market—Quality Likely to Deteriorate—Cheese Market Dull—Firm Egg Market.

The principal feature of the provision market is yet, as it has been for a long time, the scarcity of hogs. Even with the demand for cured meats falling off on account of the high price compared with other meats, packers still have difficulty in getting enough hogs to supply their local trade.

The butter market shows weakness and some dealers are reported to have accepted sixpence less in order to effect sales for export.

Cheese is also exceptionally dull, and yet from the tone of the cable reports, business might soon improve, and result in a brisk export trade.

Prices at cheese factories still stand around 11⅞ per lb.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—Compound lards are ¼ cent higher than last week. A slight falling off in supplies is the cause. Live and dressed hogs are somewhat easier. The market as a whole is brisk and shows a decided increase over last year at the same time.

BUTTER—The market at present is quite dull. Stocks in storage are fairly large, and in the absence of any export inquiry, exporters are not anxious for fresh goods. Local demand is normal and prices steady with no quotable change.

Receipts for the past week were 7,623 packages, as against 9,426 packages in 1908, same week, thus showing a decrease of 1,803 packages. For the season they are 319,735 packages, as against 351,517 packages in 1908, also showing a decrease from last year.

CHEESE — Stocks are large in big centres in England, while in the smaller towns there buying is only to supply present needs.

The large firms are still "bearing" the market with a view to lowering New Zealand prices still further. New Zealand cheese is now quoted at as low as 54s., which is one to two shillings less than Canadian. The chances are there will be no changes until after the close of navigation. Cheese at present prices looks cheap to those who are able to hold on. Receipts for the week were 61,368 boxes, as against 56,879 boxes same week 1908. For the season they were 1,633,309 boxes, as against 1,605,407 boxes same season last year.

Receipts last week were 2,564 case, as against 2,503 cases same week last year. For the season so far they are 173,750 cases, as against 171,869 cases, corresponding season 1908.

PROVISIONS—The demand for cured meats, in consequence of high prices, has somewhat fallen off, but the demand is still quite equal to the supply. Hogs are easier, but in the same proportion have the receipts fallen off. Poultry and fish are considered cheaper, which are largely used instead of bacon, and the best season for cooked hams is also over.

BUTTER—The butter market is still more or less unsettled, and waiting for several "guesses" to develop. There are so many new features connected with the butter supply of the world that even the oldest heads are completely lost in making their calculation. The local demand for choice butter is good, and there is some difficulty in securing enough of the right kind to supply the trade. As the cold weather is approaching, and the feed is changing from good grass to frozen grass, hay, roots, etc., the quality of butter will depreciate and when this takes place, stored butter can be switched in without any complaint, and as there are large quantities on hand there is no likelihood that butter will go higher.

CHEESE—The price of cheese all summer has been held at a point just a little too high for the English market and as a consequence more than the usual quantity is carried by Canadian dealers. There is, however, more enquiry from England, whether this is to find out whether our people are getting tired of carrying their loads, or whether they really need the cheese is not yet quite certain. It is, however, reported that several deals went through at an advance of sixpence. This would indicate that they need our cheese. Our local markets are unchanged.

POULTRY—The poultry trade is quite brisk. The receipts of live stock are heavy. We called attention last week to the fact that farmers should prepare or finish them better for the market. Last year the turkeys, especially, were in bad shape for Thanksgiving. This should not be repeated this year. If it pays at all to raise poultry for the market, it pays to feed them well a few weeks before they are killed.

Suggestions for Improving Quality of Butter

Few Creameries in Ontario Compared to the Number of Cheese Factories—Much of the Dairy Butter Badly Made — More Creamery Butter Should be Made.

By a Retail Grocer.

According to the recently issued report of the dairying director, G. A. Putnam, the dairy products of Ontario during the season of 1908, are as follows: The number of cheese factories in operation was 1177, and the number of creameries was 97. The quantity of of milk delivered at all the cheese factories was 1,661,039,751 lbs., which made 120,624,436 lbs. of cheese, with a cash value of $13,106,919.95. According to this report it took 13 77-100 lbs. of milk to make a lb. of cheese which netted 10 86-100 cents. The creameries produced 9,895,109 lbs of butter with a cash value of $2,355,170.43.

As only the cream is used in manufacturing butter, we have no figures to show the quantity of milk which was required to produce this quantity of butter. It, however, shows that the average value of butter per lb. was 23 4-5 cents and the average value of cheese per lb. was 10 86-100 cents.

There are several features in this report which prompts one for further information that would be interesting. The one is, why are there 1177 cheese factories and only 97 creameries in Ontario? It may be presumed that the largest part of our butter is still made by the farmers in private dairies, and the cheese is all made in factories. But the question again arises, why is this the case? We all know that creamery butter always brings a higher price than the best dairy butter, and very much more than the large quantity of "rubbish" that is still made and sold as butter. Why are farmers protected against all kinds of substitutes for butter, if the general public who have to buy their butter, could get it for much less, and be better satisfied than with much of the dairy butter? Would they not have a right to ask the government either to force the farmers to make good butter or else let them compete with oleomargerine? This would force all whose butter would not come up to a certain standard, either to improve or else let the creamery make the butter for them.

Which is More Profitable?

Another matter that would be interesting to know, and that is if cheese averages 10 86-100 per lb. and butter 23 4-5, which pays the farmer the best allowing accurate value for the by-products of each.

Now since all the up-to-date farmers are using separators there is no reason why the cream should not all go to the creamery. Surely the higher price of creamery butter would pay them, and it would also have a tendency to raise the standard of Canadian butter. Another item that strikes us as remarkable is the quantity of milk it took to make a lb of cheese. Thirteen and 77-100 seems to be altogether too high. Some years ago ten pounds was considered a fair average. Even if it takes 3 pounds more to make a lb. of cheese, it is very doubtful whether the cheese is that much better in quality. There seems to be a lack of careful superintendance in the dairy work of Ontario.

SOMETHING NEW IN BUTTER CUTTERS.

Patent on a Machine for Cutting Any Size up to 56 lbs.

A new patent has recently been taken out on a machine for cutting any size of butter up to 56 lbs. into pound sizes. The simplicity and cheapness of the machine will undoubtedly make it a very desirable article for the grocer who wants to buy bulk butter and cut it himself. It will do the work of more expensive machines and is far superior to the only cheap method now in use, that of pressing the butter in a mold and then turning it out.

The construction is very simple, a cubic framework, open in the centre with four corner posts. The butter is placed in the centre and one, or two, operators, whichever is convenient, press down a four-sided frame which fits inside the posts. This frame is strung with wires at the spaces necessary to give the end size of pound packages. By pressing this through the butter, columns of the right dimensions are left. By turning the butter on its side and using a different frame, the length of the package is cut, in all giving fifty-one pound bricks and six pounds of scrap from the 56 lb. case. The wires may be shifted to cut any size and less than a minute is required for the entire operation.

CAUTION.

Put a strong glass on the label and examine it closely every time. Always look for the name "Gillett's."

Like all good articles, which are extensively advertised, Gillett's Lye is frequently and very closely imitated. In some instances the imitators have actually copied directions and other printed matter from our label word for word. Be wise, and refuse to purchase imitation articles for they are never satisfactory.

Insist On Getting Gillett's Lye

and decline to accept anything that looks to be an imitation or that is represented to be "just as good" or "better," or "the same thing." In our experience of over fifty years in business we have never known of an imitation article that has been a success, for imitators are not reliable people. At the best the "just as good" kinds are only trashy imitations, so decline them with thanks every time.

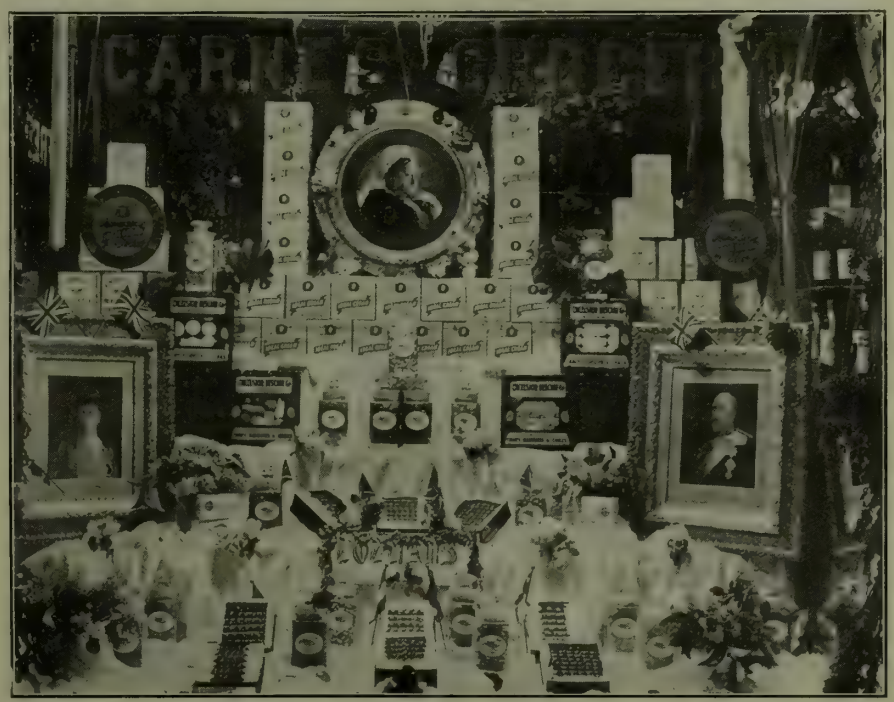
Confectionery Needs Special Care and Attention

Tasty Surroundings for the Stock Essential—Show Cases and Other Fixtures are Good Investments—High Quality Chocolates Bring Best Profits—Suggestions on How to Display Them to Bring Best Results—Dust Must be Kept Down.

By L. C. Harkness.

A branch of trade which many grocers are interested in, and in which many are meeting with fair success is confectionery. Success in the broad sense of the term is realized by the same means; it matters not what line of business a dealer may be interested in. The success depends upon the extent to which he serves the public. And to serve the public adequately by a confectionery store or department, requires the application of tactics peculiar to the business itself.

Any sign painter is not necessarily a high-class artist; a warehouse employee could not be expected to be an efficient traveling salesman; a delivery boy is not as a rule, as highly efficient as a clerk behind the counter. Neither is the salesman who is used to handle salt and canned goods, as a rule serviceable in handling chocolates or cream puffs unless he makes a study of the latter work.



Harmony Must Exist.

Every store should in as great a measure as possible be made to harmonize with the class of goods to be displayed and sold. And such goods as make up the list that are in a confectionery stock must of necessity be in as tasty and delicate surroundings as possible. This is where many dealers make a mistake. It does not matter what price you pay for chocolates or fine cakes; it would be better to handle pan-cakes and butterscotch if you have not a clean, tasty place to put them.

It may be argued that beautiful fixtures, delicate wall trimmings and spotless showcases all are costly to instal and keep up. This may be true. But there is not an experienced confectioner who will maintain that it does not pay in the end, and that the profits of the business will warrant an equipment in keeping with the class of goods to be retailed.

An experienced confectioner recently stated that the main feature in the successful management of a confectionery store is to have everything as delicate, tasty and attractive as possible. This applies both to the goods and to the interior equipment. There are very few, he said, who really know how to handle chocolates. Customers have no idea how much trouble and care there is in keeping a tray of chocolates in excellent condition. Each chocolate is to be handled separately, brushed off carefully with a camel hair brush, piled on the tray in such a way as not to scratch the surface. The loaded tray when completed must be neat and every chocolate must be arranged exactly so as to give a systematic effect to the whole.

Piling in pyramid form is the most satisfactory since it exposes every chocolate, and it affords a splendid means to store them in a handy place without the appearance of over-crowding.

A Confectionery Window That Was Shown by The Carne Grocery, Victoria.

Dust Spoils Chocolates.

The confectioner must be continually fighting the dust. It is his worst enemy. The least speck of dust on the surface of a chocolate greatly detracts from its delicate and refined appearance, so the little camel hair brush must be constantly used. The surface of chocolates, too, often become "foggy" due to the action of certain ingredients upon coming in contact with the air; this must be brushed brushed off since it gives an old appearance to the candy.

Too many dealers over-buy in chocolates. The new stocks should be so limited that upon arrival they may all be opened immediately and kept in a cool, dark place. It is wise to buy light and watch the trade. This is another peculiar aspect of the business. It requires an alertness and a mastery of details, perhaps to a greater extent than any other business.

A chocolate manufacturer remarked a few days ago that he would prefer a dealer to buy in one hundred pound lots and buy every day if necessary, than to have him buy several hundred pounds and risk losing some of that quantity. It is proven that the best way to keep the goods fresh and tasty is to keep buying the fresh goods continually.

The wide awake merchant will never buy cheap chocolates. It never pays him. A customer may buy the 25 cent grade if you have it but it is possible that the same customer will not return for chocolates again. If the 60 cent variety were purchased, they have the quality and flavor which will cause the customer to return for more. The quality sold of course will depend largely on the class of people in the community. Emphasize quality wherever possible, however, and develop individuality in your own business. Make every one in town know that there are no disappointments handed out in your store.

How to Sell Chocolates.

The merchant always finds it to his advantage to put up the goods tasty and well when selling over the counter. It is never policy to put chocolates into a paper bag. Quarter, one-half and one pound card-boxes are much neater and cleaner and they prevent the candies from being crushed. Most retailers will find it to their advantage to put candies up in this way, particularly on all purchases over twenty-five cents.

That which is true of candies regarding cleanliness and attractiveness is also true of cakes and fine table confectionery. No one will be induced to buy a cake if he sees it through a glass case which has been a support for flies.

There is also great need for care in cutting cakes. Few confectioners cut their cakes properly. This may be due in most cases to unskilled salesmen employed or carelessness on the part of the salesman. The little details about cutting evenly and with a keen knife which is washed after every usage must not be over-looked.

Weigh Carefully.

Cakes of all kinds is a line of goods that needs great precaution in delicate weighing. It is sold and bought by the pound and after sitting in the case for some time it loses weight, due to the evaporation of moisture. This must be accounted for in retailing, and if pains are not exercised in this direction, there is plenty of chance to lose money. The most modern and accurate scale should always be convenient on the cake counter and special cognizance be taken of the fraction of an ounce. The scale that will show the weights quickly and plainly is preferable.

Make Neat Parcels.

Occasionally one sees on the street car a lady carrying home cakes or pastry from the down town confectioner, with some of the contents oozing through the parcel or package. A great science of the business is to put things up in such a way that they may be carried or delivered in a neat, undamaged condition. Confectioners have been known to put cream-puffs in paper bags for delivery to the customer. Now if the puffs are crushed, as they often are, to such an extent that they cannot be put on the table in good form, can the dealer be surprised if that customer does not order cream puffs the next time she comes to the store? Goods of this nature should always be boxed, and cream puffs should be placed in boxes with individual brackets for each puff. There are boxes made for this specific purpose and it is reasonable that they should be used in every case.

In the matter of window display in both cake and candy, cleanliness and delicate trimmings must always be insisted upon. There is a tendency to overload the candy window in an attempt to display as much of the stock as possible.

The writer has in mind one of the most successful confectioners in Manitoba who adopted the policy of one-line window displays to the greatest satisfaction. He said that by inserting an individual line each day that the dealer would soon learn what line was the best selling and the most popular to handle. In time he could more carefully discriminate in his buying and this would save him money.

In a display of chocolates it is always best to arrange them orderly and neatly and in polished glass plates or dishes. This will tend to intensify the delicate nature of the article.

So conduct your business that the particular women of your town will call your store "The Pure Food Shop." Get the right kind of Reputation and your success as a merchant is absolutely assured.

Take biscuits, for instance. You should stock Christie biscuits, because they are the best.

That's no mere advertising statement, but a definite commercial fact.

Fastidious women know that the name "Christie" is an absolute surety of biscuit purity and perfection.

They insist on Christie biscuits. If they cannot get them at your store, they'll go to your competitors'. And you can bank on it that they will buy more than biscuits.

Let's tell you why Christie biscuits are the best.

Every ingredient entering our "Bakes" must be high-grade table quality.

Biscuits cannot be better than the dough from which they are made.

We use only a special blend of the best flours milled—sift and test the blend by actual baking.

Lard, butter and eggs must be high standard—nothing less could maintain the "Christie" reputation.

Our factory is the biggest and cleanest in all Canada. Hundreds of discerning women visit it every year and carry a story of cleanliness, quality and scientific baking to every city town and village in the Dominion.

They repeat that story to their friends—they see the same story told again and again, in our wide, general advertising, and the goods prove that story true, every word of it.

That's why the name "Christie" is a household word from coast to coast.—Why people who want the best insist on Christie biscuits—why grocers, chary of their reputation, do not care to carry other lines.

Every one of our 600 varieties must come up to our high standards—every batch of biscuits we bake from our famous Zephyr Cream Sodas, to our latest new, fancy line, "Zoo Biscuits," must uphold or better "Christie" reputation.

We attribute our success to four things—

Long experience,

Business Ideals,

The enthusiasm of our employes to excel,

And—the concentration of our energies in making biscuits.

Stock Christie Biscuits. They sell more than biscuits.

When writing to advertisers, kindly mention having seen the advertisement in this paper.

The display of taffies and peanut candies seems to be most attractive in an attempt to intensify the purity and cleanliness of the article. A confectioner who has had great success with candies other than chocolates states that he always displays these on a starch board, spread out as if they had just come fresh and pure from the candy room. This dealer was also a firm believer in the one line display.

Candies appeal to the taste while cakes appeal to the taste and appetite. The appetite likes quantity, and the delicate arrangement of the whole tends only to whet the appetite. So while moderation must be used in dressing the window yet the cake window can well be different in this respect from the candy window. Quantity is a good thing to emphasize, and at the same time the arrangement and back ground should be such as to emphasize the quality and refinement of the goods.

Look After the Details.

In summing up it must be stated that the details of the business count for much. Fight the dust. Instal tasty equipments. Buy carefully. Deliver goods in uninjured condition, and tempt the human taste and appetite by window displays. These are some of the points to which the successful retail grocer-confectioner must give attention.

The Man-Power Behind Five Roses

Once, Brother Grocer, there lived an Old Lady of disposition somewhat inquisitive.

(Surely, neither new nor strange—a lady that's "given to research").

Who asked Whistler the great painter: "What do you mix your colors with to obtain such beautiful effects?"

And Whistler's prompt reply: "Brains, madam, Brains."

In the big Keewatin mills, as fine and complete as Money married to Science can bring forth, even in their most inventive mood, you, Brother Grocer, could shake hands with Efficient Craftsmen, the most Painstaking in the trade.

Skilled Operatives who insist on mixing their daily work with Brains and Enthusiasm.

Brains, Brother, Brains.

They are not merely "men on the pay-roll."

Each takes Personal Pride in mastering his own particular task, and never allows his task to master him.

The Wheat Cleaner and Separator leaves nothing for the next process man to correct.

The Grinder and Rollerman does not fail in his duty to the detriment of the Silkman and Bolter.

Each contributor to the Finished Perfection of a flour fit to be branded "FIVE ROSES," shows by his every act, every job completed, that he will have his standard so high that his employers will call it "The Standard."

Such, Brother Grocer, is the Man-Power behind FIVE ROSES.

And the Brain-Power.

Since the Keewatin "Dusties" are not mere "Cogs in the Wheel"; but Intelligent, Happy, Flesh-and-Blood men who realize that the "Boss" takes an interest in them, and that their Good Qualities will stand out on their work along with their shortcomings.

Thus they make flour for the folks who want their money's worth, and who get it when they buy FIVE ROSES. It's a matter of Conscience with them —they haven't the hardihood to make an outclassed type of flour.

Therefore, Brother Grocer, than this flour there is none better.

And when "best" is said, FIVE ROSES is suggested.

So that there is no middle ground—you must either sell FIVE ROSES or sell something inferior.

Be it known to the best cook in your town, that hereby she is defied to show equal effects with any other flour —bar none.

Bears testimony to FIVE ROSES' worth, the housewife who annually bakes the prize loaf at the County Fair.

And she who tries it out is for all time spoiled for any other brand but ROSES.

Judge FIVE ROSES by Past Performance and Present Achievement.

By a milling capacity of 10,500 barrels per diem, representing over two decades of Steady Growth, the true sign of Healthy Business.

Which is based solidly on the Continued Prosperity of the Retailer, signifying his Steady Benefits.

You, too, Brother Grocer, can become a Big Winner by using the same means which have with us so eminently Made Good.

Sell FIVE ROSES to-day—

Effect That Stale Goods Have on a Grocer's Trade

Flour, Cereals, Biscuits and Confectionery if Kept too Long Deteriorate in Value—Writer Says Turn-overs Should be Frequent —Customers Won't Eat Stale Breakfast Foodss.

By A. H. Harvey.

Flour, cereals, bread, biscuits and confectionery, constitute a large portion of a grocer's business.

It is estimated that it takes 1,400,000 bushels of wheat to supply the world daily, and a large part of this is handled by the grocers. It is, therefore, the aim of this article to point out how to handle them to best advantages by the grocer, or rather perhaps, point out the results of bad or careless handling.

There is very little flour to be done up by the grocer and sold by the pound, and therefore he gets away from the difficulty the merchants of the past had in keeping it clean and free from insects, vermin, etc. All flour is now put up by the miller in packages to suit the grocers, all of which saves him a great deal of work and care. He also has the advantage of buying his supplies in smaller quantities on account of better delivery services; and yet with all this, consumers frequently have reason to complain about flour and cereals which have been damaged through the carelessness of the grocer.

The time was when a few worms in flour, a few creepers in cheese or a rank flavor in butter, was taken as a matter of fact, but now those things have all changed ; the people want good clean goods and the grocer must supply them or get out of business.

Cheapness Counts Little.

It has frequently been mentioned by various writers in The Canadian Grocer that it is not now who sells the cheapest, but who can supply the goods in the best condition. It, therefore, must be a continual study for the grocer to learn how best to meet this demand, and gain the reputation necessary to do a successful business.

To keep goods in the best condition, to make a profit over expenses, and to satisfy the customer, must be the aim of the grocer. As the flour reaches the grocer in secure packages or sacks there is not much danger of dust or dirt, but as it is more or less affected by dampness or other atmospheric conditions, it is best for the grocer to buy in smaller quantities in order to have it always fresh and free from taints.

He should also understand the different quality of flour so that he could intelligently recommend the right flour for different purposes. He should further consider and work out which would be the most profitable to himself and his customer to sell flour or bread. If he can show to his customers that it pays better to buy flour and make their own bread it is good storekeeping to do this, and the customer when convinced of this fact will appreciate the advice.

Profit in Baking.

With bread at the present price of five cents a pound, and flour at $6 a barrel, it can easily be shown, when a barrel of flour makes 280 lbs. of bread, that it pays customers to do their own baking. Besides the profit in baking their own bread it also escapes the unavoidable dirty handling in delivering it from the wagons. The grocer is in no way beholden to the baker for he supplies all the people he can direct, and the grocer can only serve what he has left. At any time, however, the grocer should be independent enough to do the best he can for his customer and himself, so long as he does not violate the fundamental principles of trade.

Stale Cereals Spoil Sales.

Every grocer must have noticed that some of his customers used a certain kind of cereal for some time, and were fond of it, but that all at once they ceased to buy it. If he asks them the reason, they will tell him that they got tired of it. The real reason in nine cases out of ten, is that they got stale goods, and without knowing this they think the trouble is in themselves.

One of the most stupid things a manufacturer of cereals can do is to overload the retailer. In no other way could he ruin his business more effectually. It would be far better for the retailer to be sold out of the goods sometimes than to be selling them when they are stale.

Keep Biscuits Fresh.

The same rule applies to biscuits. Under no circumstances should they be allowed to become stale. It is far better not to carry so many varieties than to keep them too long.

Confectionery requires special care. As these goods are always a luxury they must be toothsome or they are of no value. All kind of cakes contain lard or other shortening and they are sure to become stale and strong in a short time. Unless, therefore, they are sold soon after they are made, they are not as good as ordinary bread. Confectionery including all kinds of candy, adds a profitable line to the grocery trade, if handled right, but will be a constant loss and annoyance if it is not properly regulated. The success or failure, therefore, that a grocer meets with in all these lines depends entirely on his own management.

Wheat Market Remains Firm—Healthy Condition of Affairs Existing—No Change in Flour Prices—Cereals Quoted Lower on the Toronto Market.

From week to week reports of the crop in the Northwest show that the yield of wheat is far in excess of what was anticipated, and yet in the face of this the wheat market is very firm with an upward tendency. Russia is pouring enormous quantities of wheat on the European markets, but under all these conditions wheat remains firm, and is selling even for May delivery at about $1.00 a bushel.

The fact that farmers are in better financial circumstances, and can afford to hold their wheat has much to do with keeping up the price of wheat. By doing this they regulate the market and avoid the slumps which otherwise would take place. This, it must be admitted, is a healthy condition of affairs and the wealth of our bountiful crop will be fairly distributed over the whole country.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—The market is simply waiting for something to happen. Prices are unchanged, though it was expected that there would be a slight drop before now. Supplies of wheat are very good.

ROLLED OATS—There are no changes in price. It is hoped by the local men that the report of the Royal West India Commission will open that market to Canadian goods. It is thought that even though no direct effect may be shown, the general interest of Canada, as related to West Indian affairs, will show improvement.

FLOUR—With no change in the price of flour this week, the market is decidedly strong. It is evident that our millers as a rule are disappointed. They were looking for lower prices. However, wheat at or near the dollar mark is not out of the way when compared with other foods.

EXTRACTING SUGAR FROM CANE.

A New Method, Patents for Which Have Been Taken out by Picton Man.

Among the new patents issued by the United States Patent Office are several on a method for drying, desiccating and sifting sugar cane, and the extraction of the sugar thereafter. The patents have been taken out by G. W. McMullen, of Picton, Ont., and his son, G. B. McMullen, and have been granted in all the countries where patents are issued.

The cane is first put through a shredder and finely shredded, not ground. It then goes through a process of sifting, which enables the pith and fibre to be handled separately. This is a great economy in the operation next to be described, that of drying the cane.

The dryer is a specially constructed dry kiln, fitted with moving belts, which carry the shredded cane slowly over steam pipes. The chamber in which they operate is as near air tight as can be constructed, with the two exceptions of an outlet for the moist air from the dryer and an inlet for a warm current of air. The air, charged with moisture from the interior, is sucked out by means of an electric fan. This fan has sufficient capacity to completely change the air in the inside every few minutes, thus keeping up a continuous circulation sufficient to carry away all moisture given off by the cane. Having only warm air enter the kiln saves time in heating it inside.

The great feature of this treatment is the absolute control obtained over temperature, as too much heat would invert the sugar content of the cane.

After drying, the cane can be stored for practically any length of time, which will enable factories using this style of cane treatment to run the year round, simply by drying sufficient cane during the season. At present they can operate only for a few months.

An additional feature of the process is the economy of sugar extraction from the dried cane. Instead of the twelve cells and immense quantities of water now used, only five cells are necessary, with a correspondingly less amount of water. The sugar content is more thoroughly and easily extracted and, naturally, the evaporation of so much less water is a great saving.

An interesting feature which developed lately is that the remainder, after extraction of the sugar (begasse), can be economically dried and used, the pith for artificial silk at over $60 per ton, and the fibre for high-grade paper stock at over $40 per ton, whereas now, the cane refuse is only used as a very poor grade fuel at a nominal price per ton.

There are two dryers now in use, the one a small experimental one at Armour Institute, Chicago, where a course in sugar making by the McMullen process is being given, the other, a larger machine capable of drying 20 tons per day, is also in Chicago, or rather is now to be partly used in a larger 500-ton plant, which will be erected in Cuba in the near future.

It was used for demonstrating that the process could be used on a commercial scale. Several cars of cane were brought from Cuba and Louisiana (for the first time, by the way) to Chicago and numerous tests were made with practically uniform success.

J. Perks and Sons, grocers, Parry Sound, and Parry Harbor, Ont., dissolved partnership on Oct. 1st by mutual consent. John Perks, who has had the management of the Parry Sound store, has purchased the business stock in trade.

The Advantages to Grocers of Fall Fair Exhibits

Grocer Tells How a Country Merchant Won Big Tea Prize Through Aid of the Advertising He Received at Country Fair—It Makes the Store Known to Hundreds of Prospective Customers—Get all the Publicity You Can.

By D. T. Hodgson.

There is only one way to success in business—that is, advertising in its different phases, and one of the best methods is for the grocer to make some special display at the annual county fair. These are now held in many cities, towns and villages, throughout the country.

Take, for instance, the National Exhibition held in Toronto each year. The spaces allotted for displays are taken up long before the Exhibition opens. For what reason? For the manufacturer or the agent to place before the many thousands of visitors the advantages to them of buying this or that whenever required. It is the same with the retailer of the country town.

Some years ago a wholesale firm offered an inducement in the way of ten half-chests of tea, free to the retail grocer making the most sales of this particular blend of tea during that year.

One merchant, not unknown to me, started at once to advertise. Both newspapers of the town contained its merits, and at the fall show he made a very pretty exhibit.

A couple of young ladies demonstrated its quality to every lady and gentleman who managed to crowd near the booth.

Defeated all Competitors.

Now, what was the reward? In face of competition with grocers in larger towns, and even in cities, he captured first prize by selling that year 2¾ tons. Hats off to the merchant who fights his way to victory!

Nearly every year this same firm has an exhibit at the fair. One year they arranged with a manufacturer to demonstrate quick puddings and jellies. Another year they demonstrated blends of coffee; and still another, jams and jellies. No wonder this firm is known in every house in the town and country surrounding, and the ever-increasing trade the firm is enjoying is credited a great deal to this mode of advertising.

Then, why should not other grocers do the same? Arrange an inviting booth in the main building, decorate it with inviting colors and flags; do not move your store down, by any means, but with a few samples of this and that, arrange to demonstrate the tea or coffee you sell, or anything that will appeal to the home. Have the name of your store or firm on cards or ribbons, as well as the location, street and number. Make your many guests feel that an order from your store will pay them, and the result will be an ever-increasing trade.

"Begin small and grow by experience" is the trite advice given by those who have succeeded in any line of business.

Many scores of successful advertisers, who have started with an inch ad. and grown to be spenders of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, can be pointed to, as carrying out this statement, that it is well to start small and grow. This should serve to impel a manufacturer who has a first-class proposition to take this initial step.

TRADE NOTES.

In an interview with Lord Balfour regarding the work so far accomplished by the Royal Commission appointed by the King to investigate the existing conditions of trade between Canada and the West India Islands, and of which he is president, he stated that nothing definite could be decided until the West India merchants had been heard. The main points brought out by the investigation so far were the necessity for better transportation and cable service, and the need of a more reciprocal preferential tariff. Sir Daniel Morris, another member of the Commission, concurred with Lord Balfour.

Frank Cockburn, Montreal manager for the Pugsley Dingman Co., was in Quebec on a business trip last week.

W. S. Newman, Casselton, Ont., has purchased the stock of groceries and cigars of J. Aylsworth, Napanee, Ont.

J. D. Bristol has purchased the grocery store of J. M. Jones, Trenton, Ont. Mr. Bristol is taking charge of a good clean stock. Business he says is fair, and he expects a good autumn trade.

DISCOVERY OF CHEWING GUM.

First Shipment was Made as a Substitute for Rubber.

Chewing-gum has been called the mystery of confectionery, for, of all the millions of chewers there are very few who have any idea of what it really is they are masticating.

Chewing-gum is nothing but chicle mixed with sugar and flavoring; and chicle is the gum of a tree that grows plentifully in Mexico and Central America and that of recent years has been cultivated on a large scale in Yucatan.

The chicle tree is not unlike the India rubber tree, and the gum was first shipped to America by men who believed that in it they had a perfect substitute for rubber. In this, however, they were mistaken, as it was found that the chicle gum was insoluble. The consequence was that the first shipments of chicle gum lay unsold on the pier of the docks in Brooklyn.

One day a New Yorker happened to notice it. He picked up a piece and put it into his mouth and began chewing it. Its peculiar consistency struck him, and it occurred to him that if the stuff were only flavored it would make a nice chew, its insolubility being in its favor for this purpose. He made some inquiries as to where it came from, and whether a regular supply could be had, and bought the lot. This was the beginning of modern chewing-gum.

Practically all the crude chicle gum is shipped to Canada, where it is refined in Toronto before being sent to the factories in the United States. The reason for this is that there is a high ad valorem duty on chicle, and, as it is worth about 40 cents a pound and loses 25 per cent. of its weight in refining, the Chicle Company saves considerable every year by refining it before shipment.

ONION AND CRANBERRY CROPS.

The United States onion crop of 1909 is now practically all harvested, and, according to the October 2 report of the American Agriculturist, is placed at 4,175,000 bushels from an area of 14,300 acres. The figures showing acreage by states placed New York in the forefront, with Ohio a close second. The crop was hard hit this season in Wisconsin. The Ohio crop is turning out somewhat smaller in rate of yield to the acre, but a reasonably full crop in the state just named. The crop of one year age was placed at 4,332,000 bushels.

The cranberry crop of 1909, according to this authority, is 1,325,000 bushels, against 1,060 000 bushels in 1908, and 1,280,000 bushels in 1907. Dividing the crop into sections, 850,000 bushels is credited to New England and New York, mostly in Massachusetts. The New Jersey crop approximates 425,000 bushels, well toward a full yield.

Questions Affecting the Delivery Department

Retail Grocer Tells of Importance of Employing Responsible Parties—Care of Wagons and Horses Essential—Should Delivery Man be Charged With Breakages?—Nuisance of Late Saturday Night Deliveries.

By J. A. McKercher, Winnipeg.

Perhaps there was no period in the grocery business when the delivery question received as much serious attention as it is at the present time. It is a subject upon which a great deal may be said. In dealing with it in such a way as to be interesting and suggestive to all grocers everywhere, it is difficult to mention just those points which are a general grievance and which fit into the circumstances of every case.

That there are grievances everywhere in connection with the delivery end of the business is a known fact, but one retailer's problem and solution may not correspond with that of another.

There are, however, several things which have been brought to my attention during my many years of practical experience, which I am sure will be appreciated by every grocer who is thoroughly conversant with every branch of his business.

There are few merchants who would not admit that a handsome delivery outfit is an asset to his business. We may be aware that it is so yet become negligent in this regard. Customers like to see the outward appearance of your business take on a thrifty appearance. It is an evidence that things are moving with you and that you can assume an air of independence and dignity which is always more or less admired. Customers, too, like to have a fine outfit stop at their door to deliver goods. This is only natural. Every grocer cannot afford to keep the best made wagon, or the most gamey horse, but it is within the reach of all to keep the wagon clean and repaired, the horse groomed and well shod, and the harness oiled and neat. The care of the outfit introduces another question, viz., the management of the stable.

Assign Duties to One Man.

The merchant who is confined in the store is not at liberty to look after the delivery outfits. The responsibility of this should be bestowed on one man to keep the outfit in repair and superintend the feeding of the horses. The proprietor will find it much more satisfactory to deal with one who is competently responible than to deal with each individual driver, be there only two or ten of them. The one who is given this charge may himself be a driver, and if necessary it will pay the grocer to increase his remuneration to take the responsibility.

Regarding drivers, the grocer is prone to ignore points of civility and neatness in those who represent his interests on the delivery wagon. Adults are always preferable, provided they are careful, courteous gentlemen. Boys very often lack skill and tactfulness, and frequently drive away business by their crude manners. There are many boys, however, that are quite desirable in this respect, and of course the wage is an inducement to engage boys. The point, however, is that it is to the merchants' advantage to engage only those, be they men or boys, who comply with business requirements. There is a grocer in an Ontario town who always engages men to deliver his goods. He pays them as well as the clerks and finds it to his advantage to do so.

The boy that does good service on the wagon has a right to expect advancement from his employer. And the employer will find that the boy who served faithfully on the delivery will be of great value, should he be brought inside as clerk.

After having been on the wagon for some years, however, he is of more value to that end of the business than inside. The employer often acknowledges the driver's right to come inside, but cuts his wages down to give him the advancement. This may or may not be wise. It would seem that he would become adapted so quickly to the business, after his experiences on the wagon that it would not be encouraging to him to reduce his income. Whenever it is possible to encourage your employes by an advance in wages or a kind word, by all means do so.

Pluck Won Him Advancement.

In former days when the mud was deep and the streets were rough, I had a young Scotch lad on the delivery wagon. He was a good boy, and although he had many inconveniences, he never complained. One dark rainy Saturday night he came in on what he thought was his last trip. It was twelve o'clock, and I told him that I had another order that must be delivered that night. "Where is it to go?" he asked. "Out to the C.P.R. round house," I said, "about two miles west." This was one of the muddiest places in the city at that time. "Well, he said, "its an awful trip, but I suppose you promised to get it out there and it must go."

I could not resist honoring such pluck as that. That boy was one of my leading clerks in a few years.

Some boys are very careless in handling goods, and their breakages count up considerably. A proprietor must allow for a great deal of this, but for the boy's sake it should not be tolerated to any great extent. To charge the boy with the breakages looks like a feasible system. In that way it is possible to find out the extent to which they are accidental or due to carelessness.

Saturday Night Delivery

The Saturday night delivery question is a live one at present. It is a thing that any one grocer cannot do much with. If he adopts a system to restrict customers from buying late on Saturday for the late delivery, his competitor will reap a harvest, and the one who would do well loses trade. It is, therefore, an association matter. I was pleased to note in the columns of The Grocer, that the Victoria grocers were dealing with the problem in a satisfactory way, and according to the writer of the article, the matter was simply adjusted. The late delivery is a nuisance, certainly. From the customers' standpoint it is not necessary, at any rate to the extent that it is carried on at present. They must be educated to the matter of buying earlier and the merchants as a body only can accomplish that.

A Single Obliging Act Basis of a Grocer's Success

Winnipeg Merchant's Promptness in Supplying Crock of Butter the Means of Giving Him His Start in the Business Field—Began With Stock Valued at $60—Methods Upon Which He Built up the Business—Member of the City Council.

We often hear it said that "every act has its reward," and whether this is a safe axiom upon which to construct a treatise of philosophy or theology, it can be taken as thoroughly sound in business life. We are assured that it is true because the law of cause and effect is prevalent on the surface of things. Results are immediate.

A merchant need not be long in business before his customers are aware of his reliability. A salesman is not employed long before his employer knows the value of that salesman to his business. The wholesaler is very soon aware of the points of strength and weakness of the man on his books. One discreditable act may jeopardize the whole future of the merchant, and one creditable act may lead him to green fields of opportunity and prosperity.

A specific instance of an achievement based upon uprightness, thrift and industry, is that of J. R. Gowler, a Winnipeg grocer and provision merchant. Mr. Gowler is known by his friends as quite an ordinary man. But what was it that lead him, a penniless boy from a poor farm near Winnipeg, where he was born, up through the stages of teamster and insignificant store keeper, to one of the leading grocers and provision merchants in the west? What was it that brought a lad with little advantages of education to a state of maturity, when he should sit with the city fathers in the council chamber, sharing in the legislative duties of a great city?

It was those qualifications which the ordinary man possesses, but sometimes doesn't utilize. Mr. Gowler exercised the best judgment that he had in him. By so doing he made his own business and it was because he brought his own business from practically nothing to a superior state, that influence was brought to bear upon him to look after the interests of ward five in the Winnipeg Council.

Early Hard Times.

In the year 1885 he bought a little store with stock for sixty dollars, for part of which he gave his note. The price was low because it was not an inviting situation. In fact it was the most unlikely spot in the city, in which to do business, and Mr. Gowler was aware of that. It was all he could afford, however, and he could only make the best of it.

J. R. GOWLER.
Influential Winnipeg Merchant, who Began With Very Small Capital.

For weeks and months he worked along in a small way and then a turn suddenly came. A railway man walked into the little shop one day and asked for butter. He wanted a twenty-pound keg to take to his house, which was in a little village a few miles east of Winnipeg. Mr. Gowler did not have it in stock, but he said he would get it and deliver it to the train before it went out. The man agreed. Mr. Gowler walked a mile to a small wholesale produce house and carried the keg on his back to the train, which took it to its destination. The man went home and told the villagers how well he had been treated, and best of all that the butter was excellent in quality.

The result was that within a month every villager was eating butter that Gowler sold. And they are eating it yet. The little store has been enlarged. The undesirable location has proven to be a fruitful field. The desert has been made to blossom as the rose. And all by honest endeavor on the part of one man.

Drifted Into Sport.

For sixteen years he toiled on quite unknown. One winter evening a friend induced him to go to the curling rink. He liked the sport and was liked by his fellow-men. The next year he was vice-president of the city curling club, and the year following, its president. Some time later when the Caterers' Association was formed, he was put at its head; and two years ago when Ward Five was in need of an alderman, Gowler was thronged by the citizens and literally carried to the polls. He heard on every hand "you made a success of your own business, now we want you to look after ours." At present he is enjoying his second term in the local council.

His Business Methods.

Mr. Gowler's business tactics was in the main to inspire confidence in everyone. This, perhaps, was the real secret of his successful business life. Inside the business he was careful of details. He attended rigidly to collections, developed a cash business as much as possible, kept his stock fresh and took advantage of discounts on cash payments. He allowed no looseness in his business management.

A Montreal grocer was recently the victim of a Black-Hand game. He received a letter demanding $500, and rather than risk his life left the money in the spot named. When he went to the place later the money was gone—an easy method of getting rid of five hundred all right.

FISH—On account of the weather keeping warm, fish, particularly fresh fish, selling is slow. There is a fair demand for prepared salt and pickled fish. GREEN FRUITS—The fruit market looks tired; the dealers are wearing their overcoats, and kicking their heels. The fruit has lost its attractiveness, and the quality is not up to the standard of a few weeks ago. Some lines have ceased to make their appearance. Peaches are still doing well, but grapes are doing better. But for 'cheek' there is nothing like the California peach, which persistently faced our much superior goods all the season through, without scarcely a blush. The fruit market will likely be closed in a week or two, and the business will then be carried on as usual in the warehouses.

VEGETABLES—Potatoes are coming in freely and are of excellent quality.

Prices are lower and large quantities are changing hands. Canteloupes are keeping up their full supply. Tomatoes are showing that the end is near at hand. Celery is just in season, but is somewhat pushed back to make room for other goods. Perhaps nothing in the market looks quite as independent and as cool as the cucumber, which stand round here and there in small lots, expecting to be picked up at from $1 to $1.50 per basket.

Keeping Qualities of Various Kinds of Lemons

Those of Certain Form Likely to Prove Good Keepers—Treatment in Marketing the Fruit Has Much to do With its Quality —When the Sweating Process is Used.

To anyone who has carefully examined lemons as they come freshly cut from the orchard or as they hang on the tree, it is clear that the fruit is oftentimes extremely variable in size, shape and texture, says a United States Government report. It is quite generally held that lemons of a certain form are likely to prove good keepers, while those having other forms are liable to decay early. The unsymmetrical, usually undersized, lemons grown in the bright sun are thought to be poor keepers, while those from the portions of the tree where the fruits are well enveloped by leaves and have a good size and symmetrical form are believed to have good "life." It has not been practicable thus far to experimentally test these suppositions, but it seems, from what has been done, that there is a considerable degree of variability in the keeping qualities of lemons from the same orchard, and probably from different parts of the same tree.

The Sweating Process.

The keeping qualities of different types of lemons also depend largely on the method of treatment to which they are subjected to bring them into marketable condition. Although the inherent condition of the fruit, due partly to its early history, will determine its ability to resist decay to some extent, there is reason to believe that the method of curing is an important factor in determining the life of the lemon on the market. The lemon growers, as a rule, agree that the so-called sweating process of curing fruit has a deteriorating effect, although no definite tests have been made which would fully substantiate this belief.

The sweating process is resorted to only when the briskness of the market necessitates a rapid coloring of the fruit. The grower, although he realizes the possibility of endangering the quality of his fruit, has at present no other method of curing lemons rapidly, and is therefore compelled to make the most of the process.

THE FIRST BANANAS.

Bananas were first imported into Europe on a large scale from the Canary Islands. Until a few years ago they successfully met the competition of the Antilles and the coast of Africa. But a disease has spread in the banana cultures, and exportation has fallen off in alarming measure. As the banana figures prominently in the food of the town population of England, the British Government appointed a commission to investigate the causes of the degeneration of this useful plant. According to the report of this commission, the planters have only themselves to blame; they have given the soil no rest for years past, nor practised any rotation of crops. Confident of the proverbial richness of their soil, they have applied no fertilizers. The enfeebled plants have fallen a prey to a disease known as Cloesporium masarum, which is gradually gaining a foothold in all plantations. The report closes with the observation that the disease is successfully fought by a proper application of fertilizer to the soil.—The Scientific American.

ANOTHER CO-OPERATIVE STORE.

A co-operative grocery store will likely be opened in St. Thomas in the near future.

Co-operative grocery stores, says the Inland Grocer, continue to fare badly. The latest venture of this kind to prove a failure is the Conneaut Co-operative Mercantile Co., which began business about two months ago, lasted eight weeks and is now reported to be in the hands of mortgagees, who are selling stock and fixtures to satisfy their claim. The company sold stock to consumers, about 40 persons investing in it. The venture did not prove a success.

First Time Fresh Cod Steak Has Ever Been Successfully Canned—

THIS line has only very recently been put on the market, but already thousands of consumers pronounce it the most delicious fish they have ever tasted.

Grocers find that it meets a demand that they have felt for many years, and which no one has before succeeded in filling.

The fish is chosen from Prime No. 1 Shore Cod, and nothing more than six hours out of the water goes into package.

Heretofore codfish was cured by excessive salting and sun-drying. The sun-drying process causes a percentage of the fish to decay, and, consequently, an odor is always present when the fish is being prepared for table use. By the sealed process, used in packing Cod Steak, the product is packed absolutely fresh. Then, with skin, bone and oil removed, this fish is really a perfect food.

The product has been under climatic tests for three years, and all have been successful. Every tin is guaranteed by the packers.

The cod steak is made ready for the table in ten minutes by simply placing the tin in hot water.

Place a trial order with your jobber and after making sure yourself that none of our claims are exaggerated, recommend our Fresh Cod Steak to your most particular customers. The result will mean profitable business for both of us.

Ideas for Taking Care of Fish in the Retail Store

Fresh Fish Should be Packed in Chipped Ice—Varieties That Supply the Popular Demand—Leaking Barrels Should be Attended To—Moist Atmosphere Harmful.

In talking over the subject of the best methods of handling and storing fish in retail stores with some of the large handlers of fish in Montreal, some very good ideas were brought out, most of which are not generally known.

For instance, fresh fish should never be kept in ordinary cold storage. They should be packed in chipped ice. It is the air currents which do the damage, and this is true even in cold storage. A rancid taste is developed in the fat of the fish by contact with an air current. This applies equally to frozen. Be careful to cover the fish with ice.

The best arrangement for displaying fish and yet protecting them from deterioration, is shown in a Montreal fish market visited. It consists of a series of lined tanks set into the counter, with a depth of about one foot. Six inches of cracked ice are first put in, the fish placed on this, and a small amount of ice on top of the fish. In addition to the advantage above described, no flies will go near the fish, owing to the cold.

As to how long the fish should be kept, it depends very largely on the kind. Large varieties, such as halibut, cod, and salmon, may be carefully kept for two weeks and still be in first-class condition, while smaller will only keep perfectly for a week to ten days. Lobsters and other shell fish are not so good after only two days. Thus it may clearly be seen that the volume of trade in these lines last mentioned must be very closely studied in order that too large a stock may not be accumulated.

Fish That Sell Well.

To give the best sellers it would mean to specify seasons, but for total yearly sales, he claims that lake fish, haddock, halibut, and salmon are ahead of any others. In certain seasons others are more popular, but the sale in these lines is very steady.

Regarding pickled fish, a large jobber gave a few good hints as follows:

"Watch your barrels closely on arrival, and if leaking, or in danger of doing so, see that they are repaired. Otherwise the pickle will run out, leaving the fish uncovered. As a result, they get a little "off" in flavor, and eventually spoil. The rust from an iron hoop exposed to leakage also has a damaging effect. In case too much of the pickle has already run out; refill it by making more. In making this pickle be sure to use rock salt and make it strong enough to float a herring. Otherwise it will not be right."

A moist atmosphere causes fish to deteriorate, so keep always in a dry place.

CORNER-STONES OF SUCCESS.

How an Englishman Came to America and Has Built a Great Business.

Thirty years ago an Englishman named Charles Kupitz came out to Bismark, N. D., and with a capital of about $500 went into the grocery and meat business.

Now this same Kupitz does an annual business of $75,000, and lives on Easy Street.

He has built his business on these corner-stones:

Intelligent newspaper advertising.
Reasonable profits.
Satisfaction to customers at any cost.
Quality, and no premiums.
Confidential relations with clerks.

Mr. Kupitz has worked on the theory that he not only wanted customers, but that he wanted satisfied customers, and for that reason he has never taken advantage of his customers on prices. He has charged a reasonable profit on his goods, but when an opportunity to grab an unreasonable profit has presented itself, he has not taken advantage of it, but has given his customers the benefit. His determination to give customers their money's worth has been one of his chief corner-stones.

Furthermore, he has been willing to go to considerable trouble to get the things his customers want, if he has not happened to have them in stock. He has relied on quality to hold his trade.

The fifteen clerks employed in his store are not "bossed around." They are treated as assistants, who can be depended on to work with him for the success of the business. They talk over business affairs with their employer and discuss plans for getting more business. Kupitz encourages this plan.

And one big, solid corner-stone of the business is newspaper advertising. Mr. Kupitz takes a certain corner position in the daily papers every day, and each day he changes his advertisement. People have learned that Kupitz's corner is worth watching.

Built on a foundation such as Mr. Kupitz has laid for his business, he could not do otherwise than succeed. A business built up in this fashion will succeed, if backed by the ordinary business intelligence which a business man is supposed to possess.

The reproduction of the photograph above, gives one a fair idea as to the type of modern commercial automobile which is likely to become a necessary adjunct of every large wholesale grocery house, within the next few years. This car is the recently acquired property of L. Chaput Fils & Cie., the Montreal wholesale grocers, and is shown as it appeared in the procession of allegorical cars, on September 15, during "Back to Montreal" week. This accounts for the number of men belonging to the staff who are seen riding on it. The car can carry, with greatest ease, five tons, and enables the firm to make deliveries to all parts of the city, and especially to outlying districts in remarkably fast time. It was purchased more for suburban deliveries than city work, but, as may be imagined, it is in great demand by the retail trade for local orders.

To Get And Hold Trade

Sell your customers absolutely reliable goods. Don't run the risk of losing their good-will by offering an article of doubtful quality, or one which may injure health.

When you sell Royal Baking Powder, you are sure of always pleasing your customers. Every housewife knows that Royal is absolutely pure and dependable. It is the only baking powder made from Royal Grape cream of tartar. You are warranted in guaranteeing it in every respect, the most reliable, effective and wholesome of all the baking powders. On the other hand you take chances when you sell cheap baking powders made from alum or phosphate of lime. They are unhealthful and fail to give satisfaction.

Royal never fails to give satisfaction and pays the grocer a greater profit, pound by pound, than any other baking powder he sells.

To insure a steady sale and a satisfied trade, be sure to carry a full stock of Royal Baking Powder.

THE RETAILER classes the houses who advertise in his trade papers as the most progressive in their line—the houses out hard after business, appreciative when they get it, and always trying to give a little better service than anyone else.

Wagstaffe, Limited

HAMILTON

An exact reproduction of the best-equipped preserve and fruit packing plant in Canada.

THIS factory is situated in the Niagara Fruit Belt and has all the railway and boat facilities possible. The arrangement of the factory is such as admits of turning out goods in the most expeditious. orderly and cleanly manner. The fruit is received at one end of the building, passes right through the boiling room—which, by the way, is of white enamel bricks—into the store room, from it to the finishing-off room and from that to the shipping room, and so directly to the cars and drays. This continuous process is made possible by the use of overhead railways and does away with unnecessary and superfluous handling. Everything is transmitted on these railways, even the sugar traveling on same, passing down from the sugar storage room through chutes to the boiling room into the retainers and to the kettles. The finished product is also carried away by means of these overhead railways into the cars and so transmitted to the stock room. Every hygienic convenience for the help, such as bath-rooms, lunch-rooms, etc., has been provided for and the entire building indicates that cleanliness is the outstanding feature. It is only four years since this company commenced business in a very small way, and its success is due not only to the variety of goods turned out but to the knowledge and experience of Mr. Wagstaffe, who, before coming to Canada, was a large manufacturer of Jams, Marmalades, Mincemeats, etc., in England.

ST. LAWRENCE

GRANULATED and YELLOWS

Made only from the choicest West India Crystals.

ANALYSIS OF

ST. LAWRENCE GRANULATED SUGAR

The standard of purity.

LABORATORY OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT ANALYST.

Montreal, February 22nd, 1909.

I HEREBY CERTIFY that I have drawn by my own hand ten samples of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co.'s EXTRA STANDARD GRANULATED SUGAR, indiscriminately taken from four lots of about 150 barrels each and six lots of about 450 bags each. I have analyzed same and find them uniformly to contain 99 $\frac{99}{100}$ to 100 per cent. of pure cane sugar, with no impurities whatever.

(Signed) MILTON L. HERSEY, M.Sc., LL.D.,
Provincial Government Analyst.

CRYSTAL DIAMONDS

RAM LAL'S PURE TEA CO., Limited

266 St. Paul St., MONTREAL

The United Canners of Canada, Limited

Incorporated under the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies' Act

PROVISIONAL BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The following gentlemen have consented to act as Provisional Directors: J. W. deC. O'GRADY, Broker, Winnipeg. H. F. MOULDEN, Manufacturers' Agent, Winnipeg. J. B. HUGG, Barrister, Winnipeg. D. C. MUNRO, Canner, Alvinston. J. A. ANDERSON, Broker, Winnipeg.

It is intended that after the Stock has been subscribed for the number of Directors shall be increased, and other names substituted for some of those who are now acting, from those who become stockholders.

Head Office - WINNIPEG, MAN.

Factories located at Tilbury, Essex County, Ontario. Alvinston, Lambton County, Ontario. Jordan Station, Lincoln County, Ontario, and others which will be acquired.

Auditors: WEBB, READ & HEGAN, Winnipeg

Solicitors: HUGG, McKAY, KELLY & HUGG, Winnipeg

INCORPORATION: The Company has been incorporated under the laws of the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies' Act, with an authorized capital of $500,000, divided into shares of $100 each.

OBJECTS: The object of the Company is to acquire by purchase, build or control, a number of specially selected Canning Factories situated in different parts of Ontario and British Columbia, each so located as to be in the best district for the choicest growth and cultivation of the special classes of fruit and vegetables which it is proposed to handle at the particular plant chosen, and to be able by concentrated management to curtail to a minimum the overhead or office and general expenses, and to purchase all supplies on the most economical basis.

It will further be an object of the Company to have its entire stock taken up by the retailers of general groceries from Port Arthur to Victoria, in co-operation with the fruit and vegetable growers in the respective localities where the factories are situated, thereby assuring, through the joint co-operation of Growers and Distributors, a market for all the goods the factories can produce.

OUTPUT: It is intended that the following fruit and vegetables, among others, shall be handled:

Apples, Cherries, Gooseberries, Beans, Pumpkins, Lawton Berries, Peaches, Pears, Corn, Plums, Raspberries, Strawberries, Peas, Tomatoes, Pork and Beans, also to manufacture all kinds of Jams, Jellies and Pickles, so that the patrons of the Company will be able to obtain an entire line of their requirements from the Company's factories.

It is confidently anticipated that, through connections already possessed by the organizers of the Company, and the channels of output which it is expected to form by means of the present Company as outlined above, there will be no difficulty found in the Company's being able to dispose readily of all goods it may be able to put up.

PROPERTIES: Options have been obtained upon three of the most modern equipped factories in Ontario with a present combined output capacity of approximately 125,000 cases.

It is proposed to add to the equipment of these establishments so as to bring their combined output for the coming year up to approximately 250,000 cases.

The Plants upon which options have been obtained are:—

The Tilbury Canning Co. Ltd., situated at Tilbury, Essex Co., Ontario, in the heart of the best tomato district.

The Jordan Station Canning Co. Ltd., which was built in 1908, situated on the G.T.R., at the village of Jordan Station, Lincoln Co., Ontario, and is surrounded by thousands of acres of the best fruit growing lands on the continent, where are grown in great abundance all lines of fruit generally packed.

The Alvinston Canning Co. Ltd., situated at Alvinston, Lambton Co., Ontario, a district which grows as fine corn as is grown anywhere on the continent of North America, and is also favorably located for the production of Peas, Beans, Pumpkins, Beets, etc.

It is proposed to add to these by the purchase of additional plants if they can be obtained on a satisfactory basis, both in Ontario and British Columbia, also possibly to erect one or two new plants at very desirable points.

MANAGEMENT: It is intended that this Company shall be controlled by the Western Directorate, composed of the most reliable and competent business men obtainable, and that the management of the Company shall be in Winnipeg.

PROFITS: It is a difficult matter to attempt to predict with any close degree of accuracy the profits to be obtained from the operation of a Company of this description because of the varying prices of the raw materials from season to season, also the varying prices to be obtained for the finished output, but, basing a calculation upon the figures actually obtained in an average year, it is calculated that a mixed pack of the fruits and vegetables enumerated above of 225,000 cases can be put up for a cost of $269,000, and the selling price, based upon the results obtained in a recent average year, would be $444,000, showing a gross profit on manufacture, exclusive of any profit on jams, jellies, pickles, etc., of $175,000.

From this would have to be deducted management, office and selling expenses; cost of manufacture being covered in the cost of the pack.

Allowing $50,000 for these expenses, which is a very liberal estimate indeed and probably far in excess of what will be expended for those purposes, there would be left a net profit on operations of over $125,000, or 25 per cent. per annum on the proposed capital, and, deducting $25,000 per annum for depreciation of plant, repairs and additions, an earning of 20 per cent. per annum could still be obtained.

SELLING PRICE: It is to be borne in mind that the above estimate of profits is based upon the intention of the Company to sell its produce to its own shareholders at the regular prices paid by the Wholesale Trade to the Manufacturers for a like class of goods, thereby enabling the Company's shareholders to purchase their goods at the same prices as paid by the wholesale trade, with the additional benefit of participating in the profits of manufacture through their stock dividends.

SUCCESS OF COMPANY: A careful perusal of this brief prospectus will make it easy to see that splendid financial results will surely be obtained by the Company provided it receives the loyal and hearty support of those whose sympathy and assistance it is hoped to secure as shareholders.

STOCK: Shares in the Company are now being offered for subscription at par, and it is hoped they may all be placed with friends who will be customers of the Company for its products.

The terms of payment are set forth in the application form.

As the options obtained on the factories mentioned are good for very limited periods a prompt response will be most desirable.

All payments for Stock are to be made by cheque or order to

The Selling of Groceries from a Scientific Standpoint

Before Locating Study Class of Customers to be Served—Buy Goods Accordingly and Give the Service That Such Customers are Likely to Require—Standards Set From Three Classes of Purchasers—A Successful Business Worked on These Principles.

By Finley Acker.

Years ago the average person would have smiled in derision at the idea of designating the retailing of groceries as science. In fact it was frequently thought if a man failed in all other things he could always, as one last resort, turn to the retail grocery business, and if he had sufficient capital and was willing to work sufficiently hard and long, make at least a living out of the business.

This old idea was the natural outgrowth of conditions which then prevailed; conditions which were very different from the keen, aggressive competitive conditions which exist to-day, and which ruthlessly enforce the operation of that inherent law of the "survival of the fittest."

Probably one of the most vital differences between ancient and modern trading is that in the comparatively easy-going spirit of "olden times," the average "shop keeper" (which, literally interpreted means a "keeper" of a shop) merely sold what his patrons demanded. Therefore if small grocery shops were located at points convenient to the local buyer, and the stock embraced their daily wants, and the prices were reasonable, the dealer had only to "keep shop" and feel reasonably assured of a certain amount of trade.

But modern innovations have completely revolutionized these old conditions. Aggressive methods of newspaper advertising, circularizing, personal solicitations by suave salesmen, combined with prompt and convenient methods of transportation and delivery have resulted in invading all localities and have educated all buyers into fuller knowledge of what their money can purchase. More than this, the former passive "shop-keeper" who required the customer to do his own thinking and educating as to his wants, has been transformed into, or is being supplanted by, the well informed, experienced merchant who knows so thoroughly the qualities and characteristics of food products that he logically becomes the educator and regulator of the wants of his patrons, and when buyers of food products have full confidence that this condition actually exists, most of them appreciate being relieved of the trouble of personal investigations and comparisons, and accept the recommendations of the firm they have learned to trust. Consequently successful modern retailing of groceries has necessarily become a science, and a very exacting science, for if its vital and inherent laws are violated, punishment through the loss of trade or loss of net profit is sure to follow.

Count Men Who Pass.

A most instructive instance of how retailing is elevated to a science is found in the history of the United Cigar Stores Company. Every one is familiar with the distinctive character of these stores. They have invaded many cities and are doing an enormous business. Some superficial observers have "guessed" that their great success was due to the possession and liberal expenditure of enormous capital, and that on account of this great wealth, the dealer with limited capital is unable to compete. Some have also made the same "guess" regarding the success of certain chain stores of cut price grocers, and certain popular lunch and restaurant companies. But a careful investigation reveals the fact that very little of the work of any of these concerns is based on "guessing," but is regulated almost entirely by scientific reasoning In the selection of sites for their stores, the United Cigar Stores Company pursues an analytical method of determining how many men pass the site per day; also whether the crowd is ordinarily slow moving (which suggests a normal percentage of purchasers) or very quick moving, as when men rush for a train or a very hurried lunch, which suggests few purchasers; also the character af the men, whether poor or well-to-do; also the character of the business in that district, their experience having proven that the proximity of banks, for instance, is undesirable. In the development of their plans they take into consideration the normal tobacco buying conditions of each city. The show windows have been carefully worked out to ensure maximum drawing power to get the passer-by to "come in," and the interiors are also carefully planned to ensure the making of every possible sale—and to make it quickly and with the least number of clerks. When their methods are intelligently analyzed it will be found that their success is in reality due to the fact that their business is conducted scientifically, and while their enormous capital and their extensive facilities make it comparatively easy for them to continually develop, a smaller business conducted as scientifically and having the advantage of the genial personality of the proprietor, should also be successful.

Study Class of People.

To conduct the retail grocery business scientifically requires, first of all, a clear knowledge of what class of people it is intended to serve. There are three distinctive classes, which again might be sub-divided into a greater number.

1st. Fancy Trade.—This takes in the aristocratic and well-to-do classes, who want the best of everything; and it also includes some of the poorer classes, who want the best of a few things, such as coffee, tea, olive oil or other specialties. To satisfactorily serve this class, requires the store to be located where it will be convenient and congenial for this class of trade to visit; the store must be kept scrupulously clean; all the goods must be of first quality; the clerks must have manners which are very agreeable; the drivers must be cleanly and polite. If the store is centrally located, the system must include the prompt filling of mail and 'phone orders, and outside salesmen must call regularly for orders. Where the quality of the goods and the service is strictly first-class, "slashing of prices" is not necessary; on the other hand, however, exorbitant or unreasonable prices cannot be permanently maintained. With this class of trade it is absolutely essential that the management be thorodghly up-to-date in its knowledge of all food products, and in the utilization of executive methods which ensure reliable and pleasing service.

Some Changes Necessary.

2nd. Standard Trade.—This takes in principally the great middle classes, who want good and healthful products, but who cannot afford to pay the price for the strictly select or fancy qualities. This class is not so exacting as the other class; they are more lenient in case the quality or the service is occasionally below the standard, but they are wide-awake and well informed and the dealer will soon discover his error if he imagines they can be frequently imposed upon. For such trade the store should be advantageously located; goods displayed in liberal quantities with prices marked, and the dominating appearance of the store, in addition to being cleanly and orderly, should be active business rather than the ultra-dainty or artistic. Less cultured clerks and other assistants can be employed than in the fancy store—but every clerk should be cleanly in appearance, active in his movements and cheerful and pleasing in his personality. All the prices must be reasonable, and all well-known staple or proprietary goods must be sold at as low prices as are quoted by competitors. Cutting of prices—especially for a day or a week—is appreciated by many buyers of this class, but temptation to buy off quality goods in order to advertise sensationally low prices, will be followed by severe penalties through impairment of confidence. This class of trade may be successfully prosecuted in the business centres of large cities, but, on account of the unavoidable expense and delays of delivery, the business is better adapted to the neighborhood of the buyer.

Buyers Not so Exacting.

3rd. Cheap Trade—This class represents those who are found principally among the poor (although it also represents some who are quite wealthy) with whom cheapness or low price is the first consideration. As a matter of mere profit, I am inclined to believe that more money can be made upon the same amount of capital by catering to this trade than to either of the other two classes. Tne buyers are not so critical either of quality or service. The business is all cash. Most of the goods are taken away by the buyer—thereby eliminating order department, delivery service and bookkeeping expenses. Goods that are positively bad cannot, of course, be satisfactorily sold, but "seconds" of goods that are edible, but imperfect in appearance, can be advertised at a sensationally low price and with satisfaction to that class of buyers. By this I do not mean to suggest that the goods sold in the cheap stores are necessarily undesirable from a hygienic standpoint. This may have been true at one time, but in recent years consumers of all classes have become more and more exacting, and I know of one extensive cheap-goods grocer controlling a large chain of stores, who is most exacting on his purchases to require every article to conform strictly to the laws. This same party has also materially advanced his average standard of quality during recent years.

From the above it would seem that the science of retailing merely requires that every successful establishment must have a clearly defined policy as to what class or classes of trade are to be catered to; and after this is clearly understood, then to carefully study the characteristics or whims of those particular classes and satisfactorily meet their requirements.

Where Errors are Made.

The above may be accepted as the fundamentals of the science, and from these fundamentals can be worked out all the logical details—and in working them out, it is unwise to become "rattled" by the methods of those who cater to an entirely different class of buyers. The distinctive fancy grocer blunders when he experiments with the methods of the "cut-rate grocer," and the latter makes a similar blunder when he yields to the temptation of incurring the additional expenses of the fancy grocer by adapting his more expensive methods.

I think it will interest many to know that the unique establishment known as the "Acker Quality Shop," located in the finest and highest priced shopping district in Philadelphia, and fitted up in a style which classes it among the most beautiful salesrooms in the world, has proven a commercial as well as an artistic success.

And its success is based upon an attempt to conduct it in accordance with the above principles of scientific retailing.

CANNED FRUIT CONFISCATED.

Came to Montreal Firm From Singapore —About 5,000 Tins Destroyed.

Four thousand nine hundred and twenty-two tins of pineapples, of 1 lb. and 2 lb. size, were confiscated in Montreal, by the Health Department, this week.

Standard Imports, Ltd., received the shipment from Singapore, and noting the rusty condition of numerous tins and their swelled appearance, advised Dr. McCarrey, chief food inspector, who, when his inspectors had examined several tins, ordered about 5,000 tins to be taken to the incinerators.

The city may take action against the shippers of this food, if they discover them, and learn that the merchandise was maliciously shipped in poor condition.

C. H. Binks, of Standard Imports, Ltd., said to The Canadian Grocer in reference to the matter:

"There is certainly no evidence that the goods were 'shipped' in bad condition, and, as they took about three mounths en route, and travelled 12,000 miles, it is not wonderful that part of them (about 8 per cent of the shipment), were rusty outside the tins.

"This was caused (the papers suggest) by 'lying in water, and, of course, if any tins got rusty and burst, the juice soon damaged any other tins with which they came in contact.

"We understand that many of those sent to the dump were in perfect condition inside, but any suspicion of rust on the tin showed that later they might become leaky and the contents spoiled, and the Health Department decided to send them to the dump.

"The remainder of the shipment is in first-class condition. The trouble from occasional 'swells' is common to all canned goods, but the damage is easily detected, and is not likely to mislead anyone into using 'swells' for consumption."

Two months ago the civic health authorities confiscated some four thousand tins from Marcotte Bros., public auctioneers, who had the lot in store, to be auctioned off.

Geo. Fulcher, formerly clerk with John Dipiose, London, Ont., is opening a grocery store on the corner of William Street and Hamilton Road. F. L. Ross, an ex-grocer, is to carry on the butcher store in connection with the business.

TRAVEL ON YOUR OWN POWER.

The force that is going to carry you to your goal is coiled up inside you—in your energy, your pluck, your grit, your determination, your originality, your character, says Dr. Marden, in an article to young men on "The Precedent Breaker." Further, he says:

"The sooner you become disillusioned as to getting any great assistance outside of yourself, and fall back upon your own inherent force, the better.

"It is a pitiable thing to go through the world borrowing other people's ideas, plans, methods; other people's judgment—running to this one and that for advice—never developing your own power, independence, self-reliance.

"Originality is force, life; imitation is weakness, death. There is nothing else which will kill the creative faculty and paralyze growth more quickly than imitating others, following precedent in everything, and doing everything in the same old way."

Successful Methods Adopted by Canadian Grocers

Feature Shelf Display.

Montreal, October 19.—The accompanying cut shows the interior of the St. James St. store of Murphy Bros., grocers, Montreal. This progressive firm has two stores, the one shown here, and another at 831 St. Catherine St. West. One of the most notable features of the store is the fine shelf display. Nearly every "displayable" article is where it can be seen, the whole effect being one of attractiveness and plenty.

The store manager, Mr. Fournier, said their trade was composed, to a large extent, of transients on account of the location, near the Windsor station. For that reason good window displays were the most satisfactory method of advertising. A large banana rack, capable of holding twenty bunches at once, occupies the middle of the ceiling, and a good fruit display, in this particular line, is always shown in season.

Murphy Bros. are owners of the "Jersey Cream" brand of butter. In other lines their business is also, to a certain extent, wholesale, but the bulk of it is retail.

One great trouble due to the location near a railroad station, is the soot from the locomotives. It is very hard to keep the store looking neat in such circumstances. Politeness and quick service are the watchwords of the store. "It is the surest way to hold your customers," they claim.

Packing Fruit Sealers.

Perth, Ont., October 19.—Some of The Grocer's correspondents have reported that fruit jars arrive in good condition this year. This is not always the case however. Some still reach this town in as bad shape as ever. It looks sometimes as if the way the cases are made brings about this condition. The sides of boxes are solid but the bottom and top are very often but open slat work. If a case happens to be laid down on a nail, small stone or something else of that description there is nothing to protect the jars and breakage results.

Would Advertise Specialties.

Lindsay, October 20.—All grocers, or at least the majority of them, recognize the value of being courteous in business and of training clerks to be the same, but there are perhaps few grocers who have made civility habits take the place of advertisement in the progress of business. Yet this is what is occurring in the business of Adams Bros., of Lindsay.

Recently a number of timely hints which appeared in The Grocer, read as follows: "Work for more trade; coax your business to grow; you can do it by playing the game; one of the important moves is to advertise," and the majority of grocers, and in fact merchants in general, recognize the value of advertising; so does J. E. Adams, the enterprising head of Adams Bros, yet he does little advertising, and still more he has built up a large country and town trade and one that is paying dividends.

Adams Bros. have one of the oldest grocery businesses in the town, having followed the Blackwell Company. At present they employ, all told, eight men and a lady bookkeeper, the eight men, including the three Adams Brothers, J. E., Delbert and Frank—and the firm is considering seriously the advisibility of adding still another to their staff, so that the senior member of the firm might get a chance to get around more in the country and surrounding towns and hustle for more business.

In conversation with the senior member of the firm the other day he stated that he believed in advertising, but not in the advertising of general lines. He had no faith in the advertisement that simply stated that So and So was in business and was selling this and that and the other thing, but he did believe that business could be increased and sales made by advertising special lines of goods. He stated in part: "The advertisement has to be got up in an attractive manner and has to call attention to some special line of goods. It is the fellow with ideas that coaxes the coin toward the sales department."

"However, I believe," said Mr. Adams, "That every man in business must be courteous and treat all customers alike. This principle should be inculcated in the minds of the clerks as well."

"Be prompt, bright, courteous, sell good goods and give the people value for their money and make them feel that they are getting good value for their money, and business simply cannot help but come your way," said Mr. Adams, thus giving one reason why he still gets the business.

Pay Your Bills Promptly

Ottawa, October 19.—In conversing with a small but prosperous Ottawa grocer recently, he made the remark that many grocers wonder at the credit he had. "Well, the secret of it is," he said, "that though my capital was very small to begin with, I always paid my bills promptly. In this way I established a line of credit which has enabled me to expand to my present business."

The Late Delivery Question.

Berlin,. Ont., October 20.—There is room for great reform in Berlin in respect to late delivery on Saturday nights. As a matter of fact, some delivering is done in the wee sma' hours of Sunday morning. The matter has been brought up several times before the Retail Merchants' Association and feeling is always unanimously against the evil but there appears to be no abatement of it. This is one of the grievances the salesmen and deliverers have, and public sentiment backs them up.

Employs Good Salesmen.

Stoughton, Sask., October 18.—Although Geo. A. McCullough has only reached the age of 27 years, he has acquired a fine business here. In 1907 he came from Carnduff and purchased the grocery business of W. J. Ross. In two years his trade expanded splendidly. He has now a handsome dwelling and the company to which he belongs—Geo. A. McCullough & Co.—has recently purchased the general store business here of the McLeod Hamelin Co. The company make it a point to keep the best salesmen that can be secured and to advertise as well. This, no doubt, has much to do with their success.

A Well-Lighted Store.

Montreal, October 19.—It is always unpleasant to customers to enter a poorly lit store. In a recent conversation a grocer in Montreal said that for several months he had let his store remain in a badly lit condition and now, after changing this he had increased his trade. He laid it all to the fact that he had improved the lighting.

Look your store over and see if it needs anything of this kind.

Telephone Convenience.

Lindsay, October 20.—Modern conveniences count for a whole lot in the make-up of the up-to-date grocery store. The grocer wants to be able to serve his customers with dispatch and in fact to be as prompt as possible in waiting on them all; so it is very important that he has not got to run away to the rear of the store to the business office in order to answer the phone. Many a time the customer at the other end of the line will not order goods from any body else but the proprietor of the store, and when the store is crowded with customers much time is lost by running back to the telephone.

L. A. Primeau, one of Lindsay's progressive grocers has found it thus at any rate and to get over the inconvenience and to save time, he some time ago installed an extension phone, which is situated immediately behind the main or centre counter and which is convenient at all times. It is not a desk phone but in fact is much handier. It is fastened to one of the numerous drawers on a middle shelf and projects very little. He now states that he would not be without it, as it saves time and costs very little.

Adopting New Methods.

Berlin, Ont., October 20.—All the Berlin factories are working full time again and some overtime and business is picking up. The grocers in general are anticipating a return of good times. Stores are being improved and liberal appropriations being made for advertising.

Many of the merchants have adopted time saving devices for the handling of accounts and one after another the stores are having modern fixtures installed, glass front bins replacing the old drawers and boxes. There has also been a big improvement in the way in which windows are used. Practically all the principal stores now have modern fronts. The displays are changed frequently and made so interesting that people watch for the changes.

Bargain Day Controversy

Berlin, Ont., October 20.—Berlin grocers do not agree on the question of holding a weekly bargain day. In fact there is a sharp dividing line, those against the institution strongly criticizing those who have adopted the bargain day method, asserting that while the bargain-day men do more business they do not make any more money but simply take business away from other merchants creating a class of chronic bargain hunters. Even some of the grocers who feature bargain day would like to see it disappear altogether.

Advertises A Leader.

Montreal, October 19.—"I always make it a policy to have a daily leader and advertise it well," says a St. Catherines St. grocer. "It will bring new customers to your store as nothing else will. Women are the great bargain hunters and incidentally they form the large proportion of a grocer's trade.

Interest Your Clerks.

Montreal, October 19.—"Why don't grocers make it to their clerks' interests to see that goods are sold," said a Montreal traveler recently. "If they would only have their goods divided up and make one clerk responsible for the sales of one or two particular lines, offering prizes for the greatest increase or any other method which suggests itself, to accomplish the main purpose in view it would be to the clerks' interest to sell the goods."

Brighten Delivery Wagons.

Ottawa, October 20.—There is no better advertisement a grocer can have than to keep up the appearance of his delivery systems. Supposing he has only one express or sleigh; let that one be nicely painted and lettered. People like to see a smart delivery outfit outside their door and nothing looks more prosperous to a firm than these traveling advertisements. Now that the winter is approaching, in most of our Canadian cities and towns sleighs will soon be used extensively, and a sleigh painted and lettered will last three or four seasons. Get them out now and give the painter a chance to do good work and allow the paint to dry before using.

An ordinary flat sleigh to paint and letter will cost about $7, while an express sleigh with bobs, the cost will figure around $12. As regards to color, nothing gives a more attractive effect than the gear painted red with medium black stripe, and the box in ultra marine blue, with a block letter in gold leaf shaded with sky blue to throw out the letters.

The above mentioned prices are for the most expensive colors such as mentioned, the gold leaf being very costly indeed. In other colors the cost would be considerably less.

Another Co-Operative Store.

St. Thomas, October 19.—Another attempt is being made, this time in St. Thomas, to organize a co-operative grocery store. After the failure in Toronto and elsewhere the people in St. Thomas ought to know something more about it than what they are told by the promoters. P. J. Whelan, who seems to be the man who tries to enlighten them, has discovered the hithetro unknown fact, that if people would buy more goods at a time it would cost the merchants less to deliver them, and also if they would exercise patience when they call in the store, and wait when the clerks were busy, the cost of extra clerks could be saved. What a revelation! If Mr. Whelan has no patent in this, he had better secure the exclusive right, for on this alone the co-operative scheme will gain a substantial advantage over all other "old fogies" who never tumbled on this grand idea. He also points out that the company would be limited and therefore stockholders could not lose more than the stock they subscribed for. This is all such valuable information.

An Education For Clerks.

Toronto, October 20.—Now since the fact is established that the grocery trade requires a higher and more proficient service, would it not be in order to provide means by which the salesmen could receive the necessary instruction in the art of storekeeping. It might be suggested that the city provide a room, or different rooms in different parts of the city, where grocery salesmen could meet and receive instruction through lectures or otherwise on bookkeeping, butter, cheese, milk, tea, etc. If this were done once a week during the long winter evenings, great good could be accomplished not only for the clerks, but good results would come to the general public. Experts on all these lines could be secured at little cost to give lectures and rooms in school houses could be utilized, so that the cost would be no comparison with the amount of good which should naturally result from it.

Building Up A Mailing List.

Chatham, October 20.—In connection with the work of building up mailing lists and securing new customers, there is a grocer here who makes a specialty of newly married couples. He watches the columns of the daily papers with a particularly sharp eye for those significant two name headlines with a hyphen between, and makes a note every time of the names and future place of residence—if it is within reach of his business—as well as the probable date set for returning from the honeymoon. The name (the new one) goes on his mailing list, and usually the enterprising grocer contrives to strike a very early acquaintance with one or other of the contracting parties, with the result that not a few new customers have come his way.

He gives particular attention to suiting new housekeepers. Usually they are rather unskilled at the start, and are consequently grateful for anything in the way of advice that pans out successfully.

He reasons that every newly married couple forms absolutely new ground for working on and therefore gives him far more opportunity for securing patronage than people who are already customers of other merchants. True, the parents of the new couple have had their own business affiliation; but experience shows quite conclusively that the tendency of most new couples is to strike out an entirely new path when it comes to buying household supplies. They seem to think they can do better than their parents did, and are anxious to experiment with merchants whom their parents never tried.

Here would seem, too, to be a place where the "old family merchant" would do well to look after his fences. The merchant previously referred to sees two good points in his policy. He can help the beginners, he says, by leading them to buy good goods in preference to cheap goods; and he can train them to do business on proper lines, by paying their accounts monthly, or, preferably, in cash.

Want Assessment Lowered.

Toronto, October 20.—The retail merchants of Yonge St. think they have a grievance, and the assessment commissioner, Mr. Forman thinks differently. During the last few years Yonge St. property has gone up so that it more than doubled itself, and the assessment commissioner thought he was justified in doubling the assessment. The merchants however, claimed that some properties on which the assessments were based were speculative prices and not selling or earning values. They claimed further, that some stores are not doing as much business as they did three and even 15 years ago, when both taxes and rents were not more than half of what they are to-day. The commissioner undertook to prove that he based his assessments on real selling values, on prices that have actually been paid for properties, and also that merchants in other parts of the city had equally as good reasons to complain, for in some other parts, he said that the assessments were also doubled. He also went on to show that some of the properties about which they were complaining were not assessed over one half of their present values. A special committee was appointed to investigate the matter and assist the merchants in their appeal before the Court of Revision.

Seek Aid From Government.

Ottawa, October 20.—The Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association will go after the peddlers and hawkers this year with greater effort. The action taken last year by the organization came a little late in the year and therefore no bill was brought up in the provincial legislature as had been proposed. This late start was mostly due to the organization waiting for the other trades to join them, particularly the dry goods, which is asking for a law restricting transient traders.

The grocers have now decided to go on without them and only take up the question of hawkers and peddlars. It will be necessary to get a bill through the provincial legislature to enable the city council to pass any by-law which would help the grocers. The great complaint is that the peddlars pay no taxes into the city and the license is so small that it does not count. Yet they are able to compete against grocers paying heavy taxes and rents. Many of them pay only the fee required to get on the market—namely 10 cents—and there they buy their loads from the different producers, often before the bell rings, which is contrary to the by-law. Immediately they go out and peddle the goods over the city. The grocers will call their first meeting since the summer this week when they will map out their campaign for the winter and along with other questions will take up the matter of price-cutting, which unfortunately has begun again among the larger dealers after two years of quietness..

Autumn Window Decorations.

Chatham, October 20.—A local confectioner uses autumn leaves effectively in connection with a window display of chocolates. The chocolates, placed in dishes, are ranged upon the bottom of the show window, which has been covered loosely with white cheesecloth. Between the dishes red imitation maple leaves are placed. Maple leaves are also fastened at the top of the mirror which backs the window and streamers of imitation maple leaves are hung from the ceiling to about half way down in each of the four corners. These leaves are in green, red and yellow.

In this case imitation leaves are used. In fact, real leaves dry so quickly that they speedily lose their color. This can be avoided by varnishing, however. Besides maple leaves, there are vines whose leaves turn a brilliant red, and these lend themselves very effectively to window decorations. The leaves, of course, should be kept in subordination to the goods displayed, merely giving the entire display a seasonable touch. They prove especially attractive with candy displays.

An Ad. on the Wrapper.

Perth, Ont., October 19.—A local drug store has printed on sheets of paper about the size of an ordinary dodger an ad. for pepper and cream of tartar. This ad points out plainly the purity of these articles if bought at that store.

These sheets are used as wrappers for small packages and this merchant believes this advertising brings good results.

Just "Thanks!"

Chatham, October 20.—A merchant here makes it a rule, when receipting any bill, however small, to add the one word, "Thanks."

It takes but a few more strokes of the pen or pencil, but that one little, appreciative word seems to have been something of a factor in holding business for him, once it has been captured.

"I have never done any other way," he remarked, when questioned. "It just seemed to come natural to me. It seems to affect my customers more than the familiar words, Thank you, call again! Quite a few have remarked on it, so that I imagine the practice is not as general as it might be."

Clean Advertising Matter.

Chatham, October 20.—"I use quite a bit of printed advertising matter in the way of cards, cartoons, posters, etc.," remarked a grocer the other day, "but I have one rule to which I rigidly adhere.

"That is, that the moment a card or other article becomes badly soiled, it goes straight into the bonfire.

"It may seem wasteful, but the way I look at it is this. The moment an advertising card becomes dirty, its advertising value is gone. It might as well be blank so far as selling power is concerned. If my customers come in and see a breakfast food carton covered with fly-specks, the sight of it will in many cases inspire a dislike to that particular breakfast food. And it is the same with many other lines. I don't think it is fair to the manufacturers to use advertising matter that has been injured in this way. Furthermore, I don't think it is fair to myself."

Price Cutting.

Montreal, October 19.—"So many grocers use poor judgment in their special sales," said a broker in Montreal, "that if a competitor cuts the price of eggs, they do the same thus giving him an advantage by allowing him to show that they simply followed his lead. Why don't they cut the price of tea or sugar if they wish to accomplish something?"

In other words he meant that they should not imitate but originate.

Special Window Displays for Hallowe'en Times

Such Displays Attract Customers When They are in the Mood to Purchase—How to Construct a "Jack-O-Lantern" Window —Can be Illuminated at Night.

Hallowe'en time is near at hand so that a few suggestions on a special window display may be appropriate at this time. Holiday and special season displays are always valuable in as much as they attract customers at times when they are in a particularly receptive mood towards purchasing.

Of course windows should be carefully attended to at all times but at holiday times and before special seasons they should be watched very closely.

The pumpkin or "Jack-O-Lantern," shown in the illustration, was constructed of wagon rims 4½ feet in diameter, forming the ribs. Over this was pasted heavy building paper, painted with water color paint to imitate as nearly as possible the color of a pumpkin. A large banana stem was used to represent the stem of the pumpkin. The nose was made of a large squash which was hollowed out, nostrils cut in it and an electric light put inside. The mouth and teeth were made of a large sheet of steel, the teeth being cut very irregular and painted white, and the outside edge of the steel painted red to represent lips. The eyes were made of six-inch glass balls painted white, with the pupils black and crossed. Inside these glass eyes were electric lamps which produced the winking effect. The eyebrows were made of black curled hair placed over each eye, and a goatee was made of a bottle brush. The mouth was lined with red calico, and the tongue made of the same material stuffed with excelsior and protruding slightly from the mouth, and the mouth lighted up with electric lights had somewhat the effect as shown in pictures of the infernal regions. No background was required owing to the size of the "pumpkin," but shocks of corn were used on the sides, while at the top was a quotation from one of James Whitcombe Riley's poems as follows:

"When the frost is on the pumpkin
And the fodder's in the shock."

Validity of Fixing a Selling Price by Contract

Western Paper Claims That Producer Has the Right to Fix His Own Price—Standard Price on a Proprietary Article Does Not Restrain Competition With Other Articles Having Similar Use it Says.

From Commercial News, Seattle.

Two recent cases in this city of manufacturers refusing to sell their goods to certain wholesale dealers, after they have violated a contract to sell to retailers only at a fixed price, and a judicial decision in a Pacific Coast case restraining a retailer under a similar contract from cutting the contract price, direct attention anew to the question of the validity of such price agreements. They have been generally held lawful whether enforcible or not. It is an admitted principle that the producer of any article has a right to fix his own price for it, and to refuse to sell it to anyone for any reason satisfactory to himself. With reference to any proprietary article it may be important for business reasons to maintain a standard price, and that does not restrain competition with other articles having the same or a similar use.

Restraining competition among those dealing with the particular article of commerce by fixing a uniform price at which it may be sold, has obvious advantages for the manufacturer, and for the trade as a whole, says the New York Journal of Commerce, and if the price is a fair one, there seems to be no reason why it should not be maintained. The manufacturer can undoubtedly refuse to sell to any dealer who refuses to contract to charge the regular price. If the selling contract is alike for all and one or several dealers violate it, it is unfair to those who honorably abide by it, and may be a serious injury to the business of the manufacturer by restricting his sales as a whole. The redress usually resorted to is that of refusing to continue supplying the article to dealers who violate the contract. Not long ago a western concern tried by a resort to the courts to compel a manufacturer to sell to it, notwithstanding a refusal to make or abide by such a contract, and the claim to a right to purchase was not sustained. It was in effect held that fixing and maintaining a price by such agreements was lawful and nobody could be compelled to sell without making such a condition.

In the case just decided in the State of Washington, the court went further, and held that a retail dealer purchasing goods of the manufacturer under a contract, fixing the price at which he was to sell could be restrained by injunction from selling them at a lower price, "from whatever source now or hereafter to be obtained." In that case it was a "trade-mark" and widely advertised proprietary article, and the chief ground upon which the decision rested was that cutting the price caused other dealers to refuse to buy and handle the article in question, "causing the plaintiff to lose many sales, and much profit, and to set at naught and destroy the effect of all the aforesaid advertising, and creating the impression with the public" that the article was "of inferior grade, of no more value than the price asked and received for it, all tending to destroy the confidence of the public" in it, etc. This appears to be a somewhat novel decision, likely to excite considerable interest if it is taken as a valid precedent.

Purposes of the Western Retailers' Association

Organization Getting in New Members Before Advanced Steps are Taken—Strong Business Men at the Head—What is Necessary to Become a Member of the Association.

Staff Correspondence.

Winnipeg, Oct. 19.—The Western Retail Merchants' Association are making arrangements to thoroughly canvass the retailers in every part of the west with a view to increase the membership of the association. Little difficulty has been met with in getting local merchants to sign up, and the association is strong in point of numbers in Winnipeg alone. At a recent meeting of the merchants, however, the matter was taken up for discussion, and the consensus of opinion was that the organization was such an advantage to the merchants in any line of business that for the benefit of all concerned every merchant available should be given an opportunity to become a member of the association, which had for its aims the betterment of the retailer's position.

The present secretary, J. S. Clark, has clearly brought to the attention of the local merchants on more than one occasion, that to be without an association as a protective body, retailers were acting contrary to true principles of business enterprise. Every other organization finds it extremely advantageous to have an association for the protection of the individuals who are struggling to realize the same aims and purpose in life. Labor is organized, manufacturers are organized, wholesalers are organized, in fact, practically every branch of business is thoroughly organized but the retailers. The day is coming, however, when they shall be united and that which effects the one shall effect the whole, and every man shall be his brother's keeper.

Get a Copy of the Act.

It would be well to read the act incorporating the association to do business in Manitoba. This act will be mailed to any merchant by writing to J. S. Clark, secretary Western Retailers' Association Winnipeg.

The first four sections of article 2 of the act reads:—

2. The said assocition shall have power,—

(a) To promote the consideration and discussion of all questions affecting the retail business and generally to watch over and protect the interests of persons engaged in the retail business.

(b) To give the legislature and public bodies and others facilities of conferring with and ascertaining the views of persons engaged in the retail business as regards matters directly or indirectly affecting that business.

(c) To communicate with chambers of commerce, boards of trade and other mercantile and public bodies throughout the Dominion of Canada, and concert and promote measures for the protection of retail merchants.

(d) To originate and promote improvements in the law, and to support or oppose alteration therein, and to effect improvements in administration, and, for the purposes aforesaid, to petition parliament, and take such other steps and proceedings as may be deemed expedient.

This is only an instance of what the association purposes to do in a more comprehensive way. It surely will appeal to every retailer that he cannot afford to remain outside the pale of that which is originated for the development and the success of his own enterprise.

At present the association is organized in Winnipeg, with a complete staff of officers, including a board of directors. They are already discussing various questions, with a view to relieving some greivous situations respecting the life of the trade.

Some of the Purposes.

A movement is on foot to establish sections for the purpose of carrying out the detailed work of the whole body. Some of these are, insurance, credit and debit department, shipping section, etc. These, however, cannot be decided upon until the whole field is canvassed, and retailers in every section are represented.

It is purposed further, to have sectional orgnization with respect to districts. Each district, comprising a town, city or municipality will have an organization to co-operate with the head office in Winnipeg. Matters of interest in any particular section of the country will be dealt with by the general executive representing the association as a whole. Thus every individual matter will arouse the interest of every individual in the association, and the affair will be adjusted for the general good of all.

The association is on a very strong footing in Winnipeg. There are men of money and men of brains working day and night to bring into effect such an organization as will have a strong legislative influence. We could mention such men as A. M. Nanton, John Leslie, D. R. Dingwall, J. A. McKerchar, W. H. Stone and many others, who are standing behind the association that is being managed as any strong firm would be managed. J. S. Clark, secretary pro tem, has given his time and ability to the work, and was greatly instrumental Regarding the membership the local body decided to invite E. M. Trowern, secretary of the Dominion Retail Merchants Association, to come west to assist in the campaign for more members.

Accompanying this article is inserted a blank form for the use of retail merchants everywhere in the west who wish to join the "Western Retailers Association."

Merchants are requested to fill in and send it to the secretary.

XMAS WINDOW DRESSING AND ADVERTISING CONTESTS.

Christmas is once again not far in the distance. It is the one time in the year—if there is any special season—when the grocer should apply all his ability and energy to make his trade as extensive as possible. Christmas comes but once a year, and therefore an extra effort can easily be made. Window dressing and newspaper advertising should be foremost in the minds of merchants—and in fact, any other project that will tend to make this year's Christmas sales better than ever before.

In accordance with the custom of The Canadian Grocer, the past few years, we have again decided to institute a Christmas Competition in both window dressing and advertising—so fruitful have our previous efforts been.

Contestants in the window-dressing competition will be divided into two classes:—

(a) Grocers and grocery clerks in city stores.

(b) Grocers and grocery clerks in country districts.

Prizes to the extend of $20 will be given, the first prize in each class being $7, and the second $3. All that is necessary to be done is to send in a photograph of one or more of your windows, with a description of it and the name of the artist who dressed it.

In the advertising contest all that is necessary is to send in a Christmas advertisement clipped from the local newspaper. An award of $5 will be given for the best written advertisement, the contest to be judged by an advertising specialist.

The last day for the receipt of window photographs and advertisements is December 31st.

Begin early to make your plans and be first in the race.

The Grocer's Encyclopaedia From Week to Week

Source of Our Supply of Cranberries—Cape Cod the Most Important Place of Growth—The Industry in Canada and the Quantity Consumed by Canadians.

CRANBERRIES—Just now cranberries are playing an important part in the sales of grocers, who handle them. The season explains the reason. Cranberries are on the market in large quantities and the demand is good.

Cape Cod on the New England coast has long been recognized as the most important home of the cranberry and down there the fishing industry is rivalled by that of growing these berries in the bogs. Cranberries are the basis of an enviable income for the people of that district.

Nearly everyone has his cranberry bog, some only a small patch, others sufficiently large ones to enable their owners to live comfortably the year round on the proceeds.

Cape Cod, of course, is not the source of the world's supply. Large quantities, nevertheless comes from there. The industry forms the principal means of support for the inhabitants. During the season, everyone, young and old, is occupied in harvesting his or her share, and after that is done, helping some one else with the same purpose in view. Boxes and barrels are in evidence from one end of the Cape to the other. From dawn till dusk everyone is busily engaged in "pickin'" or "packin'" the fruit. A family which has its big "bog" is independent for life, while anyone who lacks this sign of prosperity is looked down upon by his neighbors as incompetent or lazy.

At present about 10,000 acres of the Cape are under cranberry cultivation, and over 300,000 barrels will be gathered there this year. In cash this means over $2,000,000 to those engaged in growing them.

Cranberry sauce at Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners is almost a necessity in every well-regulated household. Everyone is familiar with the finished article of food, but how many know where the delicious fruit comes from and what it has come to mean to the Cape Cod people? Even the children there are taught to regard the industry as the one which furnishes them with what comforts and pleasures they enjoy.

Cranberry picking forms an out-of-door occupation which is, in a great measure responsible for the fine general health of its devotees, and is, at the same time, so lucrative that poorhouses are almost unknown to the people of the Cape.

Grown in Canada.

Wisconsin is also a large factor in cranberry growing. It is estimated that the crop there is about two-thirds of that at Cape Cod. Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island are large growers too, although this year the crop is estimated at less than last. In 1908 these two provinces produced about 25,000 bbls., while this year the estimate is 10,000.

Parry Sound in northern Ontario is also attracting attention as a producer of cranberries. In fact, they can be grown profitably in almost any swampy place if carefully looked after. The United States variety is said to be better than the Canadian, because the former has the better color and also the packing is looked after more carefully. Canadian shippers should, in the estimation of dealers, pay more attention to the picking, cleaning and packing of cranberries—if they did their trade would extend.

It was estimated that last year Canada consumed about 50,000 bbls. of this fruit.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

J. A. Marven, Ltd., Moncton, N.B., have now full possession of the addition to the office and warehouse, which they occupy on Main Street. The addition is 87' x 20', and two stories high. It will facilitate things much, as it will give the firm more room for receiving and sending out goods as well as larger space for storage purposes. The biscuit factory is now well equipped for the handling of the firm's business, as last year, new machinery was installed. Mr. Marven has been hustling, especially this last couple of years and results are showing.

The Wm. Davies Co., Toronto, are just now looking for large shipments of poultry. This firm is one of the largest buyers of poultry in Canada and merchants will find it a pleasure to do business with them. It will be particularly advantageous to be connected with them in a business way, as they make it a point to pay for shipments daily.

CARE IN DELIVERY.

"A new customer came to me the other day from one of my competitors," said a St. Catherine Street, Montreal, grocer, "and eventually told me why. She had ordered a list of things, among others a can of kerosene. When the goods arrived at the house it was discovered that the tea and bread tasted of kerosene. It simply showed a lack of judgment. A little more care in the placing of the goods in the wagon would hav obviated the accident. It taught me a lesson," he added.

HIGH FIG PRICES.

Fig prices this year are high. A cable recently received by a Canadian importer states that the crop of Smyrna figs this season barely reached 100,000 loads, while last year it amounted to 115,000 loads. This leaves a shortage of 15,000 loads in comparison with the crop of 1908, and last year the supply was quite insufficient to meet the world's requirements.

There has lately been a sudden demand for naturals, and the heavy sales put the primary market up fully 2s. Layers have also advanced steadily since the opening of the market about the middle of August. American buyers have still large wants for natural figs to be supplied, and there is not much prospect of any recession in prices, and in the opinions of brokers they are likely to go higher.

The market is now from 20 to 30 per cent. higher than the opening, which means that retailers who purchase figs will likely be requested to pay higher prices. Some wholesalers have advanced their quotations a quarter of a cent per pound, so that from present indications it is to the interest of the grocer to purchase figs before the market goes up further.

THE DECLINE THAT FAILED.

There is a peculiar situation existing just now in the cured meat trade—one that does not present itself more than once in a score of years.

It is the failure at this time of the year for the usual decline in the prices of hog products. Invariably in the autumn season prices of cured meats decline on the British market. This affects the great hog markets of the world. But this year such a decline did not occur and the reason why it didn't is ascribed to the fact that the customary extra supply of hogs did not materialize, and also because the demand has been better maintained than usual.

The extra supply and the decrease in demand have always at this time caused the decline. The occurrence of the opposite has kept up the prices. That this happens infrequently is illustrated by the assertion of the general manager of a large Canadian packer and exporter, who declared that he had never known it to occur before.

Just how cured meat prices will rule in a year from now is mere speculation. This week in Chicago nearly 1,000 packers gathered in convention, and among the reports presented was one to the effect that higher prices for meats were sure to come.

"Prices now are higher than they have been for years," a committee reported. "Prices in all probability never can go lower and in all probability must go up. There is little chance for the decrease in live stock prices, and if they continue to go up it will be necessary to charge more for meat."

The advances that recently have taken place in hogs and hog products have, of course, been due to the scarcity, and the scarcity was due to the prevailing high prices of feed. Farmers evidently have considered that selling the grain was more profitable than raising hogs. But as to how long this will last cannot be forecast. Nobody knows how long the farmers of the world will decline to raise hogs, and, as an influential Canadian packer states, any person who predicts anything to occur in the future in the hog market is merely guessing.

A FINE POINT OF LAW.

An interesting case developed in the London, Ont., police court last week in connection with the alleged unlawful peddling of fruits and potatoes from door to door by a grocer.

His counsel contended that the defendant was within his rights since the fruit had been ordered through his grocery store and since the potatoes were the products of the Province of Ontario.

The question raised, therefore, was whether a hawker had the right to peddle goods which are the growth of the province without first taking a license. This point was strongly argued by the counsel for the defendant, but the magistrate was of another opinion. He contended that if the grocer had kept a market garden and was growing potatoes and other products of his own he would be a producer and not a middleman, and therefore would have the right to take vegetables around in his wagon and sell them. But not being a producer, he claimed that the defendant was getting an unfair advantage over those hawkers who were called upon to pay the license even on goods produced within the province, and that his act was unlawful.

Although the grocer was not convicted of breaking the law, the magistrate stated that if in future it was proven that anyone was peddling products of the province without a license he would hold him guilty and fine him accordingly.

LARGE APPLE SHIPMENTS.

The apple business is now booming in Nova Scotia and large shipments are going forward to the London markets. One of the Furness Line steamers that sailed from Halifax last week for Liverpool took 21,000 barrels. The crop is turning out much better than expected earlier in the season. The color is splendid, and few wormy apples are found; the chief fault is with the large number of codlings.

The weather has been particularly favorable for the picking of fruit and the warehouses are rapidly filling up. Several buyers for the foreign market were in Nova Scotia recently picking up the fruit. Fairly good prices are quoted and better are expected in the near future.

The show of fruit at the Horticultural Exhibition recently held in Middleton was the finest ever seen in Nova Scotia. From now on the shipments will be very heavy. Large quantities are also being sent to Cape Town and Newfoundland.

WESTERN MERCHANTS UNITING.

There is no better medium of obtaining rights that are due a trade than by an organization of that trade. Every merchant realizes that alone he is practically powerless in effecting trade remedies, but that by united effort, if it is strong enough, almost anything can be accomplished.

The Western Retail Merchants' Association has now been completely organized and it is the duty of western merchants to join the ranks and make the organization as powerful a one as is possible. Manufacturers and wholesalers have associations to look after their common interests, and why not retailers? An organization is of little use unless it is strong. It, therefore, needs members, and not only members, but their active co-operation at all times.

On another page of this issue appears a Winnipeg despatch, setting forth the purposes of the Western Retail Merchants' Association, and what has already been accomplished. This should be carefully read by merchants, and particularly those in the west, and if it appeals to them, let them join the organization and aid in the betterment of the retail trade in general.

NOVA SCOTIA MERCHANTS ORGANIZE.

The organization of the Retail Merchants' Association of Nova Scotia has been completed and a definite course to follow has been decided upon. The merchants of Nova Scotia are determined on considering the prominent questions affecting the retail trade with a view to effecting reforms, as the objects below given indicate:

To deal with weights and measures of goods, as we are led to believe that there is a great amount of injustice done to the retailers and consumers in this way, and it should be the duty of all members of the said association to report to the secretary any cases of shortage, with the names of the parties responsible;

To enquire into telephone rates, which we find exorbitant in some districts; we consider this a matter in which we may have to ask special legislation;

To enquire into the matter of parcel post business, as it affects retail trade;

To ask the government to hold the manufacturer responsible for the adulteration of goods instead of the retailer;

To ask the government to make a uniform rate of bank discount not exceeding six per cent., in view of the fact that interest paid is only three per cent.;

To advocate the consolidation of the transportation companies in order to reduce the freight rates;

To prevent the retailing of goods by wholesale houses; all such cases to be reported to the secretary;

To establish a universal cash system in selling goods.

During the next few weeks the officers will communicate with the retail merchants throughout the province, and advise them of the formation of the association and asking their support in perfecting the organization. A set of by-laws were adopted and the membership fee was fixed at $20. The annual meeting will be held in Halifax the third week in January.

MERCHANTS HAD TO HELP.

Out in the west there was never a better crop. Business is already proving this to be so, but probably the mention here of an actual condition of affairs during the harvest-time will more strongly illustrate the fact that the crop of 1909 has beaten all its competitors.

It is well known that many farm assistants left eastern Canada, and particularly Ontario, to work in the harvest fields of the west. Thousands went out to help garner in the crops, as has been the custom year by year. But this year sufficient help could not be secured, even with the addition of the vast army from the east, and to overcome this handicap, and in order to get the crop harvested before it was too late, many merchants in smaller places throughout the west closed their stores and went out into the harvest fields themselves. In other cases, as reported by travelers, women and boys were left in the stores, while the merchants hired with the farmers to help with the crop.

These are actual facts and go to show not only the vastness of the grain production of western Canada, but indicates very pointedly the great possibilities of this section of the Dominion.

CHEESE INSURANCE.

The present depression in the English cheese market is partially responsible for a new idea—the insurance of cheese values.

The London Grocer, of October 2nd, contains an advertisement which is self-explanatory:

"This offer is to the retail trade, and only to those outside the metropolitan area of London and the cities of Liverpool and Manchester; and Aberfalls, Ltd., reserve the right to withdraw or vary the price should the market conditions alter before your application is received. Will September cheese go higher? It may. It is shillings cheaper than last year or 1907, and nearly all foods are on a higher basis. Will September cheese go lower? Perhaps it will. The higher prices may have stimulated production. But we are not going to discuss the prospects with regard to cheese prices. We are here to put your mind easy whichever way it goes.

"During the last year or two you must have realized that a cutting line in cheese has helped your competitors to get in. You have found the company shops, who are able to take advantage of the market, selling cheese at a less price retail than you can buy wholesale. These things need not be. Your trade can be covered. Protect your position!

"Listen to this:

"'You can, for a trifling sum, secure your stock for the next few months. We shall be pleased if you will let us protect your interest. You can use our capital and experience. We will buy for you first-hand, and you have no further responsibility. By these methods you are in the same position as the millionaire multiple shop-keeper.

"'Our Proposition: We will give you the option to call (on the terms of the form herewith) for from 10 to 10,000 for one shilling per cheese! Finest Canadian cheese (white or colored). If the market goes down and you do not call for delivery, you only lose 1s per cheese. If it goes up, you, by exercising your right of call, will secure cheese made in the best months of the year—viz., September or October—at a price which will not hurt you if you have to sell a cutting line at 6d retail. Many schemes—soap, margarine and tea—have been placed before you recently, but none, we venture to say, so sound and attractive as this. 10s will secure the right the right to call for 50 cheese; £5 will secure the right to call for 100 cheese, and £500 will secure the right to call for 10,000 cheese. Intermediate quantities at proportionate prices.'

"Our exporters of cheese state that they cannot understand the working of this trade innovation. Suppose, for instance, that the above firm agrees to give A. the option to call for 10,000 boxes of finest Canadian Western colored cheese, September make, at 55s per cwt. c.i.f. terms (the price mentioned in their form of contract) and the price advances 3s to 4s per cwt., is it to be understood that for a margin of 1s per cheese the firm will deliver the goods at a loss of 2s to 3s per box? It seems to us that the firm in question is figuring on low prices, in which case the buyers might not call for the goods, and the firm would make 1s per box. Some firms here think cheese is good property at 55s c.i.f. for Western and 54s c.i.f. for Eastern."

ALWAYS COPY ORDERS.

Many merchants neglect to take a copy of orders given to traveling salesmen, relying upon their memory to keep track of the stock, and upon the salesman to see that the order is filled properly.

This system is to be condemned, however, as a loose method likely to cause trouble for the merchant sooner or later. With few exceptions, salesmen can be relied upon to treat customers fairly, but the exception proves the necessity for a rule, and none should object to hand the retailer a carbon copy of the order booked. This will aid the merchant in checking the receipt of goods and will also be a guide in giving further orders.

A case in point occurred during the past week, when a retailer stated that he had placed an order with a salesman for a special line of goods. These were not delivered when promised, and the merchant could not remember the name of the firm with whom he placed the order, although he remembered the post office address. He was unable, therefore, to write a letter regarding the order until he had made inquiries and secured the name of the concern.

Traveler Tells of Weaknesses of Retail Merchants

Too Many Forget Importance of the Store Window — Sufficient Care Not Taken With the Goods—Thinks None Should be Left on the Floor—How a Grocer Lost a Good Customer Through a Basket of Peaches.

Written for the Canadian Grocer by a Traveler.

Of all men who visit the retail grocer perhaps the traveler has the greatest opportunity to know how a dealer may improve his business. He sees all classes of merchants and after some years of experience is in a position to competently pass judgment upon the methods and habits of the retailer. The traveler, too, who is anxious to do business is particularly desirous to have the goods which he is selling move well, and in his own mind often devises means by which the dealer might to a better advantage handle the goods. He is often tempted to voice his sentiments, but he learns to curb his wanton advice under such circumstance as where it is not well received.

The drummer who is writing these words is going to conceal his identity for once, and just draw attention to a few points where the retailer might improve his business in a general way.

I enter into sympathy with every dealer who makes mistakes or fails to recognize those things which it would most surely benefit him should he do so. The details of the business are so distracting while in operation that many things are overlooked for the moment. When overlooked a few times they are forgotten. Merchants, too, often pursue old methods which they have learned years ago and which now have become habitual, though with the advanced civilization and the change in customs and etiquette, they become repulsive to those who deal with him.

It is always necessary that the merchant should "keep up to the times." This takes in much. In these days crudeness is fast wearing off the surface of things. This is a refined age, modernization is being emphasized and it is just as necessary that this spirit should prevail in the grocery trade as any other institution.

Purpose of the Window.

To come to specific instances, the first thing I wish to mention is the matter of display and more particularly window display.

Optical sensation is the feature of this age if not a prominent feature of every age. Whether this is right from a moral view point or not cannot be discussed, but merchants are justified in falling in with that tendency which is so dominant everywhere. Often grocers build new stores, giving little thought to the display end of the business, with the result that they have not the facilities when the building is complete. It is a mistake not to plan the business so that the display feature will be one of the most fundamental for the success of the business to which your whole life is given over.

We hear much in these days about sunlight. The introduction of sunlight within the walls of a building has become so popular that at present it is almost a craze on the part of architects and modern house dwellers. Now why do not all merchants take advantage to a greater extent than they do of this feature, which is so necessary and build more spacious windows. The more glass in front of the store the better. Enlarge your window seat and let the light come in upon the whole store, making the whole scene attractive from without and more cheery within.

I once heard of a lady who was driving past a grocery store which had made the display feature a leading one, and she saw from the buggy seat an article on the wall shelf fully twenty feet from the front window, she stopped at once, went in and made a dollar and a half purchase.

The open front gives the customer the assurance that there would be no objection to going inside. The more they can see inside the greater to them is the welcome.

Taking Care of the Goods.

Tastiness and refinement cannot be too strongly emphasized. It is the custom in many places to leave cases of goods exposed to the dust and flies, not to speak of the tendency of customers to pick and nibble at the goods. It is much nicer to see cases of dried fruit and the like, covered with glass. Cases as a rule are a uniform size and it is not very difficult or expensive to keep a stock of glass plates on hand cut the proper size to fit neatly on the case. Think about it, and try it. It will appeal to you, and it will certainly appeal to your customers.

I have seen grocers and clerks handling goods with the bare hand which the customers had to carry home and eat. Yes, I have seen it so often that my stomach feels queer when I think of it. It may be said that the grocer's hands are clean and that that sort of thing is expected, but it does not matter it is naturally repulsive to a twentieth century mortal. It is habitual and really there is little excuse for it.

How much more tasty it is to see a dealer lay oil paper on his hand before he lays sliced meat on it so that he can roll it up without touching it. Details of this kind count for much. Customers notice them and appreciate your endeavor to cater to their tastes.

Keep Vegetables off the Floor.

In some places more than others, I have noticed that grocers insist upon leaving such goods as vegetables on the floor, or in boxes on the floor. Goods on the floor give the interior the appearance of overcrowding. Get the goods up and your stock will look better and you will have plenty of room in which to turn around.

Goods also can be kept cleaner if they are off the floor, and whether this is true or not they assuredly look cleaner. A neat shelf built separately for vegetables about the height of a barrel is much better than the floor where dogs smell them, and customers of a rude sort may spit on them.

Smoking Behind the Counter.

Should the grocers smoke behind the counter? There are few who will admit that it would be policy for him to do so. There are many grocers who take a whiff at the pipe between customers and perhaps run back to the rear to spit and return to the counter wiping the mouth.

If we could see ourselves as others see us, we would dispense with many of our crude traits.

But the merchant above all should endeavor to win rather than repel by his personality. It is personality that counts.

How Customers are Lost.

The lack of working harmony between the employes of the same store often leads to serious blunders that is an impediment to business. For instance a case comes to my mind of a lady who ordered a basket of peaches; picking out a special basket in doing so. Her name was put on the basket by the salesman, who in this case was the proprietor, she ordered a long list of goods besides this and left the store. The proprietor handed the list over to a junior clerk to fill out without drawing his attention to the special basket of peaches. The result was that the clerk innocently picked up the most convenient basket and had them delivered. The peaches were rotten.

If the grocer had been within reach of the lady when the peaches arrived, something would have happened. She never entered his store again, and only phoned once and then there was an "electric storm."

This was an oversight on the part of the grocer, but his working machinery should be such that such a thing could not occur. I cannot name the system you need. There are more ways than one to get over the difficulty. Devise your own systems to suit the circumstances.

In conclusion I wish to state that it is in the minor details that many merchants are weak. They would be giants in the larger sphere of business could they get over the little things.

Be clean in appearance, civil and courteous to customers and to everybody including, of course, ourselves, the travelers.

It pays to be genial, pleasant and painstaking to all who enter your store whether to "do business" or "to get business."

PERSONAL NOTES.

J. B. Cullens, who was for several years with Bovril, Ltd., Montreal, has joined the selling force of the E. W. Gillett Co. His territory will be the north shore, province of Quebec.

Ald. S. J. Carter delivered an interesting address before the Literary and Debating Society of the Y.M.C.A., Point St. Charles, Montreal, last week, on "Our Municipal Government." The lecture was appreciated by a large audience. W. C. Murray occupied the chair in the absence of Ald. Manning, of Verdun.

Membership of Montreal Association Increasing.

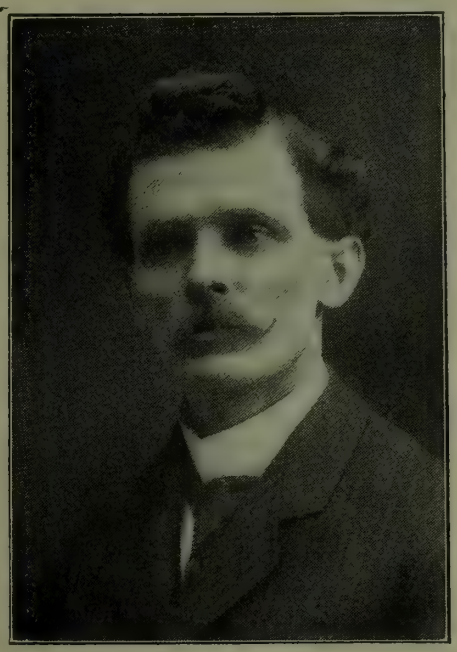
More Than 600 Now Belong to the R.G.A.—Annual Meeting Held and Officers Elected—New Fee of the Retail Merchants' Association Discussed.

Montreal, Oct. 12.—The annual meeting for the election of officers of the Retail Grocers' branch of the R. M. A., took place at the offices, 270 St. Catherine St. East. Last year's officers were returned with the exception of the 2nd vice-president and the auditors. The results are as follows :

President—J. A. Dore.
1st Vice-President—J. B. Boileau.
2nd Vice-President—J. I. Lussier.
Treasurer—A. Laniel.
Secretary—A. Sarrazin.
Auditors—J. A. Labonte and P. Daoust.

Those present at the meeting, in addition to the above were : R. Gervais, P. St. Pierre, L. E. Panchand, R. Martel, J. B. de Baulieu, E. P. Lalande, W. Girardin, A. D. Paquette, L. P. Tougas, E. Dubuc, A. Dubuc, Z. Colpron, E. H. Montpetit, F. J. Beaulieu, O. Dupuis, A. Landreville, S. Gagne, W. Fleury, H. Benoit, E. Brais, J. Denault, J. A. Beaudry and J. G. Watson, all of Montreal.

A letter was read from the National Brewers, Ltd., regarding the sale of beer to peddlers. They stated it would at present be impossible to do what the grocers wished—restrict the sale to peddlers—as some one else would simply take the business.



The importance of the peddler system to the grocers of Montreal is very great and a continuous effort is being put forth to curtail their trade. At present the peddler's license is $50, but it looks as if, through the efforts of the Grocers Association, it would be raised to $200 within a short space of time. The city council has recommended that change in the city charter to the provincial govment which has ratified it.

Regarding the trip to Albany, Boston and New York, recently taken by fifty members of the association, all seemed to have had a most enjoyable time. They were particularly pleased with the reception accorded them in Boston by the Fleischmann Yeast Co. To quote the words of one of the men "our money was no good" explains the hospitality precisely.

An invitation was read from the Saloonkeepers' Association, for the members to take part in a banquet at the Windsor, but no action thereon was taken.

J. B. Boileau suggested that it was high time the association took an active part in local elections. At the next meeting plans for such a step will probably be made.

The main object of the meeting, outside the election of officers, was to consider the amendment recently passed by the parent organization, the R.M.A. raising the dues from $2 per year to $5. It was pointed out by J. A. Beaudry and J. G. Watson, that the work could be much more efficiently and thoroughly carried out if more money were available to do so. It was found impossible to continue on the present basis. The $5 is to be divided as follows : R.M.A. Dominion Board, $1, R.M.A. Provincial Board $2.50, and local branches, $1.50.

J. I. LUSSIER,

The Only New Officer Elected at Annual Meeting of The Montreal Retail Grocers' Association. He is the 2nd Vice-President.

Some of the members seemed dissatisfied with the new fee, but nevertheless most of those present paid up. The matter will be further discussed at the next monthly meeting. It was not definitely accepted. In talking the matter over afterward with some of the representative grocers, the feeling seemed to be that they had been neglected for the other branches. Membership of the local section is now over 600 and is growing daily.

TRADE NOTES.

Wm. Brawley, Orangeville, Ont., has purchased the grocery stock of S. E. Buchanan. Mr. Brawley is putting in a full line of choice groceries, flour, etc. Butter and eggs will be accepted as cash.

The Wylie Milling Company have decided to rebuild their large flour mill at Almonte, Ont., recently destroyed by fire, and the contract has already been awarded. The mill will be a one hundred and fifty barrel capacity, larger than before, and will be up to date in every respect.

M. R. & M. H. Cox, of Morell, P.E.I., who have for some years conducted a general store in the village, are dissolving partnership the first of the New Year. M. R. Cox will continue the business in the old stand. M. H. Cox is fitting up a store building on the opposite side of the street, where he intends to open out a new business early in the year.

J. J. Hughes, Souris, P.E.I., is erecting a large and up-to-date store building on the opposite side of the stret from his present stand. This structure, when completed, will be a creditable addition to the business blocks of the thriving town and will enable Mr. Hughes to take ample care of his increasing business.

J. H. Magor, of Frank Magor & Co., Montreal, has been unable to make his usual fall trip through Western Canada, owing to an illness of several weeks duration in London, England. He is now improving, and hopes to be able to return to Canada before the end of October.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS.

Teas.—A few low grades expected.
Coffee.—Strong in primary market.
Spices.—High.
Sugar.—Steady at reduction.

Montreal, Oct. 21, 1909.

The canned goods situation is much the same as last week except that dealers are beginning to feel more keenly the shortage of peas. The lucky men who got all the peas they ordered are feeling very happy over it.

The disastrous fire at Quebec partially destroyed the dried fruit cargo of the S.S. Bellona, and has caused the firms to whom they were consigned considerable loss and inconvenience, owing to the fact that most of the goods were already sold.

Sugar is steady at the reduced prices and trade is good. The market, as a whole, is quiet, and presents no sensational features.

SUGAR—The demand continues good with little prospect of any immediate change in the situation. The raw sugar market continues high but it is not thought it will become strong enough to affect local conditions.

DRIED FRUITS—Valencia raisins are in good demand owing to the fact that they came in on a bare market. The quality of newly arrived goods is only fair.

The Quebec fire destroyed a considerable proportion of the goods recently landed from the S.S. Bellona, and seriously damaged more. The full extent of the damage is not yet known.

SPICES—Whole cinnamon is up, owing to the shortage in crop. There is a big demand for all lines, though individual orders are small.

Speculative buying of peppers in New York and Europe is now the cause ascribed for the recent rise in these lines. Many also think the price has only reached its natural level. Possibly a combination of the two is a good solution. At any rate they seem to be up to stay.

RICE AND TAPIOCA—Rice continues in pretty fair demand. The feature of the tapioca market is the rapid rise in values in the primary markets, they having advanced more than ½ per cent. or ¼c. per lb. from lowest quotations. In some quarters a return to old-fashioned prices is looked for, but the wish seems to be father to the thought, from present indications. When the demand from the States slackens a little, there will probably be a reaction.

CANNED GOODS

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Coffee—Tending to higher prices.
Sugar—Steady demand.
Dried Fruits—More new arrivals.
Figs—High prices.
Nuts—Firm market.

Toronto, Oct. 21, 1909.

The wholesale grocers are all reporting excellent business. One said that "it is exceptionally good." Orders are satisfactory and accounts are promptly paid. Advances are noticeable in some lines, but declines in none. On the whole trade is healthy and active. Brooms are "up in the sky." Some of the dried fruits are higher, and somewhat different from former reports, are also below the average in quality.

Coffee also is taking an upward tendency. Tea is firm. Although the fruit preserving is practically over, the retailers stocks of sugar are pretty well sold out and the demand for sugar still continues.

SUGAR—Owing to the strong feeling in raw sugar it was thought that the drop of 10c in refined sugar would again be recovered, but it is likely it will stay for some time where it is at present.

While some of the dried goods are not up to the usual standard, layer figs appear to be of exceptionally good quality, and prices will rule high. ON A SIX MONTHS' HOLIDAY.

J. H. Devaney, who has been associated with Front St., Toronto, for the past 29 years, representing three of the largest grocery houses, has retired from the road temporarily, feeling that a six months' rest will bring him around to perfect health. Some five months ago Mr. Devaney was very ill, with pneumonia and heart trouble. Leaving the road for six months will no doubt help him materially.

A HANDSOME ISSUE.

The special autumn number of "Die Kolonialwaren-Woche," the German grocery trade paper, published in Berlin, Germany, has arrived at the Toronto office of The Grocer. The management is certainly to be commended for the fine, artistic work executed on the covers and the general attractive appearance of the paper. The editorial features have been carefully selected, and present the grocery trade questions as they exist in Germany in the most practical manner. The publishers of "Die Kolonialwaren-Woche" are to be congratulated for their enterprise.

FEWER FAILURES THIS YEAR.

Bradstreets recently sent out a circular containing a concise tabulated report of business failures in Canada during the first nine months of the current year, accompanied by a list of those for the same months in 1908. In Ontario the figures for 1908 were 481 and this year 386, practically a hundred less. In Quebec last year there were 449 and this year 506. The figures for the other provinces last and this year are: New Brunswick, 32, 53; Nova Scotia, 37, 60; Prince Edward Island, 4, 3; Manitoba, 99, 64; Alberta, 76, 35; Saskatchewan, 57, 40; British Columbia, 42, 54, making a total last year of 1,227, and of this year, 1,201. These failures in 1908 were represented by liabilities of $14,394,248 and this year $9,555,707.

A CHINA DEPARTMENT.

Morrish & Vanatter, Goderich, Ont., have opened a china department in connection with their Maple Leaf Grocery. They purpose making their china department a feature of their store.

RAIN SPOILS PEA CROP.

In last week's Grocer mention was made of the high prices of canned peas due to an unexpected shortage. Evidently similar conditions exist in the Old Country according to a circular issued by an English manufacturing firm. It says that since their special offer was sent out on Sept. 1st, owing to the practical failure of the Dutch crop due to the continuous bad weather and an almost equal state of affairs in the growing districts in England, they were compelled to raise prices and to accept orders only on condition that they were able to obtain the peas they required. In some cases the crops are so poor that it is hardly worth while having them threshed.

TRADE NOTES.

D. & M. Nichol, grocers, Ottawa, Ont., have made an assignment to Wm. A. Cole, for the benefit of their creditors.

The Dominion Sugar Co. is extending invitations to friends to visit their factory at Wallaceburg, Ont., on Thanksgiving Day.

Joseph Kavanagh, for many years a grocer in Ottawa, and a keen, active business man, died last week at the age of 65 years.

Dana F. Ward, general manager of the Freeman & Cobb Co., wholesale fish dealers, Boston, Mass., was in Montreal this week on his regular trip.

Thomas Moore, Montreal, won Spratts' Challenge Cup, offered by Spratts Patent, Ltd., London, Eng., at the dog show run in connection with the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto.

Edouard Labourdette, representing Joseph Ramell, Paris, France, has been in Montreal for two weeks, calling on the trade. He sails for Europe this week, but will return some time in February.

Fred Hughes, of F. Hughes & Co., Canadian agents Spratts Dog Foods, has returned to Montreal, after a holiday spent at the Kaneron Club. Harold Hughes leaves to-day for a shooting trip in the same district.

D. F. Percy, representative of the John Clouston Co., St. John's, Newfoundland, codfish packers, was in Toronto on business this week, and called upon the company's agents there, the Lind Brokerage Co. He left for the west on Wednesday and will go as far as Edmonton before returning.

On Monday morning of this week prompt action on the part of the Montreal fire brigade averted what might have been a serious fire in the spice mill belonging to Herron, Leblanc, Limited, Montreal. The cause of the fire has not yet been discovered, but that the loss would have been heavy is without a doubt. As it is damage to the extent of $5,000 was incurred.

E. M. Walcott has joined the staff of the West India Co., Montreal, coming from the Demerara office of Sandbach, Parker & Co., who are represented by the West India Co. in Canada. Mr. Walcott should make a fine lieutenant to Mr. Brookfield, the manager, possessing, like Mr. Brookfield, such an intimate and broad knowledge of the West Indies.

Geo. H. Allen, of Allen, Taylor & Co., Waterloo, Que., died recently. He was one of the most influential business men in his native town, where he had been for many years. In a recent issue of The Grocer a cut of the old store of Allen, Taylor & Co. was published, it being 70 years of age. Mr. Allen was 74 years old.

W. C. Murray, general Montreal agent of E. W. Gillett Co., Toronto, will deliver a series of papers during the coming winter before the Literary and Debating Society, Point St. Charles, on the following subjects: "Essential Features of Detail in Business," "The Successful Business Man, Both as Employer and Employee," "Salesmanship."

J. W. Steeves, Elgin, N.B., has purchased the grocery business of David Steeves, Moncton, N.B. Mr. Steeves has replenished the stock, and now has a first-class line of groceries. The store has been newly painted and everything presents a neat and tidy appearance. David Steeves will remove to Harcourt, where he will open a general mercantile business.

A fire which consumed the stables of the Laing Packing & Provision Co., Mill St., Montreal, broke out Monday night, Oct. 11th. A number of the horses and delivery wagons were rescued, but 20 horses and 26 wagons were consumed. The loss is fully covered by insurance, but the inconvenience caused by it is considerable. The cause of the fire is unknown.

NEW FACTORY COMPLETED.

The Imperial Extract Co. has just completed the erection of a large new manufacturing establishment on Matilda Street, Toronto, and have now removed from 22 Church Street, Toronto, where they have been for some time. The main building of the new factory is 100 feet x 80 feet with three floors and basement. The growth of the business during recent years has made the present move necessary. The new building is about two and a half times as large as the old one on Church Street; it is up-to-date in all particulars and adequately equipped to meet the demands of the business which now extends from coast to coast. The company is about 28 years old. The present managers are F. W. and W. M. Shirriff.

New Sugar Refining Company Formed in Vancouver

Capitalized at $2,000,000—Nothing New Regarding Ultimation of the B. C. Sugar Refining Company—Dealers Awaiting Ashcroft Potatoes — Ripe Olives From California — Important Change in Fish Companies Advances Halibut Prices.

Vancouver, Oct. 18.—There is something doing in the local sugar situation, another refining company being in the process of organization. The name is the Vancouver Sugar Refining Co., with a capitalization of $2,000,000, the main movers being Robert Kelly, of Kelly, Douglas & Co., wholesale grocers; J. W. Stewart, of Foley, Welch & Stewart, railway contractors; E. J. McFeely, of McLennan, McFeely & Co., wholesale hardware merchants; T. McCaffry, manager of the local branch of the Union Bank, and Macdonald, Marpole & Co. It is proposed to go ahead as quickly as possible, a site having been purchased, and at a meeting of the company on the 14th instant, progress was reported. Those in the trade state they are not surprised, as the local company already established here is firm in its terms of 14 days. This they claim, does not allow the wholesaler time to even hear in many instances from his customers in the interior to whom he may have shipped sugar, let alone getting any returns. It means a big investment alone for a company that handles much sugar, and large quantities of such a staple article are turned over.

Nothing further has been heard of the notice sent out by the B. C. Sugar Refining Co. that no sugar would be sold to dealers who sold the product of any other refinery. More outside sugar has come along, and it is not being sold surreptitiously, but in some instances is being prominently displayed.

Kelly, Douglas & Co., have purchased 42 feet frontage on Cordova street, adjoining their present location, and it is proposed to extend their warehouse.

Vancouver dealers are daily expecting potatoes from Ashcroft, where some of the best come from. They are late in arriving on the Coast this year. Revelstoke is now achieving a reputation for growing high-class potatoes. There is no reason why good potatoes could not be grown all through the dry sections of the interior, and with the gradually clearing up of the land it is probable that people will see the advantage in growing potatoes for which there is a steady demand, good market and firm prices.

Ripe olives from California, done up in deep cans, are being placed among the dealers here. They are practically new in Vancouver, and somewhat of a luxury.

An important move in the fishing industry has been the disposal of the business in Canada of the New England Fish Co., to the Canadian Fishing Co., a move which is rather misleading. The New England Fish Co. is a United States concern, which has been catching fish in the north, and shipping its product from Vancouver, through in bond to the markets in the eastern states. Objection has been raised time and again, since Canadian companies could not operate successfully, with the foreign company enjoying these privileges. Objection was also raised since it was able to do business in Canada also, although duty was paid on what fish it brought in. Now it is announced that it has sold its Canadian business to the Canadian Fishing Co., which has been known to be a Vancouver organization. Since the sale was announced, it has been discovered that the New England Fish Co. controls the stock of the Canadian Fishing Co., the Vancouver men having sold out. As the thing stands, the New England Co. practically sold to itself, the company with the new name having all the appearances of being a purely Canadian concern, when in reality there is little difference in the former conditions. In the meantime, the sale has been marked by the advance in the wholesale prices of halibut from 4½ to 6½ cents, almost 50 per cent. A. L. Hager, manager of the New England Fishing Co., who was very eager to have the news of the sale made public, without the additional information, is now on his way east on a business trip.

Fawkes & Co., dealers in choice family groceries, fruit and vegetables and salt and cooked meats, have been in business in Cornwall, Ont., only a short time yet they find their methods are bringing good results.

CROWN BRAND TABLE SYRUP.

The exhibit of the Edwardsburg Starch Co., Cardinal, Ont., at the Owen Sound fall fair was one that met with much favor from the many visitors. This progressive company has had remarkable success in selling Crown Brand Table Syrup, and the miniature pails of this popular brand, which were given away to the crowds which surrounded the booth will do much to further increase the demand for it in the district contiguous to Owen Sound. Attractive literature was handed out including recipes in which Crown Brand Table Syrup figured prominently. This pure and wholesome product is made from select Indian corn and is a table commodity that most retail dealers find absolutely necessary to carry.

Exhibit of the Edwardsburg Starch Co. at the fall fairs in Owen Sound, Collingwood and Elmvale, Ont.

The booth at Owen Sound was artistically arranged, pyramids of the yellow label Crown Brand tins standing out distinctly on a background of snow white. It made the exhibit the most talked of one in the main building and as nearly every house in Owen Sound was provided with a sample of syrup, this exhibit will do much to aid the retail trade in that district.

The same booth was also shown by the Edwardsburg Starch Co. at the fall fairs in Collingwood and Elmvale, where the same receptions were given Crown Brand syrup. As these places are in the midst of splendid farming communities, and as every visitor from the country carried away a sample, the company has already realized the advantages of this system of advertising. The exhibits were in charge of J. T. Paul and F. A. Verey, the Toronto agent, was also present during the fairs.

The Real Nature of Selling Work—

TO judge of the value of the trade paper as an advertising medium, the real nature of selling work must be kept in mind.

Remember that advertising, except for mail order propositions, is never designed to complete sales—that's what you employ a staff of salesmen for.

Yet, trade paper advertising performs necessary selling work, becauses it carries the buyer through at least two stages toward the buying point—the attention and interest stages.

The inquiries that come from your trade paper advertising must therefore always be regarded as incidental to the real selling work this advertising is doing.

The Selling Talk that Sells

The strongest selling argument is the self-interest of the buyer. And you know, if you have tried Red Rose Tea in your home, that it is the best value in tea, and that it is always "good tea." You convince your customer that the best tea for her is Red Rose Tea, and she is going to buy it. When you sell it to her once she will keep on buying it, and there is where your self-interest is rewarded. You know that so long as you supply her with Red Rose Tea, she will not be going elsewhere to buy tea—and the rest of her order.

Try Recommending Red Rose Tea

It will please more of your customers than any other tea.

POINTERS—

Advances—Buter, eggs, brooms and coffee.

New Goods—Beans and brooms.

Weaker—Salmon and matches.

Winnipeg, Oct. 21, 1909.

There has been a noted falling off in the demand for several lines this week. This is probably due to the fact that merchants are ordering futures for Christmas trade at present, and also because farmers everywhere are engaged with their fall work. The collection departments in the wholesale houses are working overtime just now sending out receipts. Yesterday a local house received four letters each containing cheques for four figured accounts. The manager said, "it is coming in bunches now."

Markets are firm with the exception of the cereals, which are plentiful at this season of the year.

SUGAR—Orders are coming in freely since the recent decline, and prices are firmer again. It is interesting to note that to-day's prices are 10 cents lower than the quotations one year ago.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS — The 1909 crop of California apricots was about 14,000 tons, of which European buyers took 10,000 tons. This left a small amount for American buyers and was soon sold, so that now the market is practically cleaned up. Present holders are now offering for 3 cents above opening prices, and it is expected that the prices will go higher.

Advices state that the demand for peaches exceeds the supply. A big shortage in the eastern apple crop has increased the demand for peaches and prices are advancing.

Although the prune crop in California, Oregon and Washington is large, the demand has been correspondingly so, European buyers being the heaviest for the past 10 years. It is estimated that three-fourths of the crop is already sold for shipment.

The dried fruit situation is strong, and it looks as if higher prices will rule on nearly every line.

MILLING COMPANY'S ANNUAL.

At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the Lake of the Woods Milling Co., held in the head office of the company, Montreal, Robert Meighen, president and managing director, submitted the financial statement for the year ending August 31, 1909.

This statement showed net profits of $723,380.38 for the year, an amount which warranted, an adition to the dividends, a bonus of $10 per share to the holders of the common stock. In addition Mr. Meighen showed that the liabilities had been reduced below the low figure of 1908. The liquid assets were $1,518,420.35, or $351,625.71 more than last year. The amount now at credit of surplus (31st August), is $1,284,395.49.

It was also pointed out that Lake of the Woods Milling Co. were now guaranteeing the Keewatin Flour Mills bonds, amounting to three quarters of a million, with interest at 6 per cent.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as folows:—

President and Managing Director, Robert Meighen; Vice-president, Hon. Robert Mackay; General Manager, G. V. Hastings; Eastern Manager, W. W. Hutchison; Secretary, Frank E. Bray; Treasurer, F. S. Meighen; Assistant Secretary, Robert Neilson; Local Manager (Montreal), B. S. Sharing, and Assistant Treasurer, T. F. McNally.

VALUE OF GOOD COPY

Personally, I believe "ads." in trade papers should be made so attractive, so interesting in some way that the merchant as he glances through the trade journal will stop and see what you have to say. The simple announcement that you are in business is not enough. I don't care how prominent a firm is, they should not get the idea they are so big that all they need to do is to reproduce their name on a page in a trade journal and say nothing more. They should do something to make the merchant curious; in fact, somewhat anxious to meet the travelling man you are sending out to represent you.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

An Easier Tone Exists in Provision Market — Light Stocks on Hand—Opening for Canadian Butter Made on English Market on Account of Danish High Prices—Cheese Supply Above Requirements.

The provision market is easier. The supply of hogs is still insufficient to meet the requirements, and as the stocks on hand are very light, if not entirely exhausted, cured meat cannot be expected to come down very much from the high point to which it has climbed.

Butter is also weak with the exception of the local trade. Prices for export had to give way to effect sales. The "Danish Selling Committee" in their efforts to force the English people to pay more for their butter, caused a little stir in the market, and made an opening for some of our Canadian butter, but they found out that they made a mistake and are now willing to accept from 1 to 2 shillings less. While a large quantity of Canadian butter is held by speculators, it is more concentrated and more in the hands of a few than last year, and therefore under better control.

Cheese remains dull and weak, and the supply keeps ahead of the requirements. Already the New Zealand prospects are eagerly watched, and as they are favorable to a large production, it has a weakening effect on the market in general.

With the exception of the hog product everything is in abundance and looking for buyers.

BUTTER—The market remains steady with light receipts, 6,297 packages as against 7,339 packages for the same week last year. For the season they are 326,032 packages as against 358,856 packages same season last year. There is some export inquiry, which tends toward the idea that stocks, although large, are not greater than will be required for local consumption.

CHEESE—The English market is in a state of deplorable depression, owing to the expectation of a big New Zealand make. The New Zealand futures are now selling at the same price as Canadians for immediate delivery, thus making Canadian sales very slow. No improvement is expected until after the close of navigation. The Quebec factories will close in about two weeks. The cheese now coming forward is rather poor in quality, and will have to bring a lower price.

Receipts for the week are 60,790 boxes as against 61,814 boxes same week last year. For the season they are 1,694,099 boxes as against 1,667,221 boxes same period 1908.

CHEESE—The cheese market remains dull and inactive, and if there is any change at all it is about ¼c lower. The local demand is fair, and if the grocers would consider their own interests and act accordingly, they would talk up the food value of cheese, and very much increase their sales. Let any grocer post himself thoroughly on cheese, put it in an attractive condition and talk cheese intelligently as every good salesman should and he can easily double his cheese sales in a week. Try it and if you do not accomplish it, learn more about cheese.

POULTRY—To meet the Thanksgiving requirements poultry is beginning to pour in, in large quantities and of all grades of birds. As is usually the case, a large percentage of them are in bad condition. Farmers in some cases spend all summer in building the frames and then forget to put meat on them. This seems to be the height of folly. With this condition of affairs the farmers will never get paid for the cost of the frame, and the consumer pays for the weight of the bones without getting the meat he looks for, and the end of it is disappointment, dissatisfaction and loss all round. Failing in the attempt to teach farmers to dress their poultry properly, dealers prefer to buy them alive, and dress them themselves. In this way the dressing is very much improved, but the feeding which belongs to the farmer is still far from what it should be.

The writer saw a box of turkeys opened when it arrived this week, which were not fit to sell. A prospective buyer lifted one up and remarked: "This one must have died from consumption." It certainly looked like it.

FRESH FOR 26 YEARS.

An interesting feature of the reports from the Peary expedition was the statement of Prof. McMillan concerning the discovery of the abandoned base of supplies of the Greely expedition of 1881-3 at Fort Conger, in latitude 81 deg. 44 min. The storehouse, with its twenty-seven years of snow covering, stood just as the despairing Greely party had abandoned it when they made their dash southward to escape after vainly waiting for relief. In it the Peary party found quantitites of supplies, including a great pile of bacon, which was just as sweet as the day it came out of the smokehouse.—The National Provisioner.

SUGAR COMPANY ENTERTAINS.

Wallaceburg, Oct. 19.—On Thursday of last week the Dominion Sugar Co., of Wallaceburg, formerly the Wallaceburg Sugar Co., entertained its beet growers to the number of more than 1,000.

Invitations were sent out some time before to all the company's beet contractors, to visit the factory and attend the Walaceburg Fair at the company's expense. Upwards of 1,000 accepted. In the morning the visitors were shown through the factory, the various processes being pointed out and explained by guides from the company's staff. Between 11 and 2 o'clock the guests were entertained to dinner in the company's large new warehouse, after which such as desired were given a free electric car ride to the Wallaceburg Agricultural Society's grounds and furnished with free tickets.

This is the second time the company has entertained its patrons, and the affair was successful.

THINGS THAT SHOULDN'T BE.

Pointers for Grocers and Their Salesmen While on Duty in the Store.

Here are some suggestions picked up from visits to Canadian grocery stores on things that should not exist:—

A bundle of codfish within two feet of the butter.

A young clerk sitting in a chair waiting for a lady to tell him what she wants before he gets up.

A grocer lighting his pipe and throwing away the match carelessly before it is out.

A store where the goods are arranged in order, as follows: Butter, grapes, eggs, cabbages, biscuits, sugar, apples, flour, bread, lemons, and oranges.

A grocer who keeps his comb honey in the refrigerator.

Two clerks talking baseball while a lady is waiting to be served.

The habit of sprawling on the counter to take an order from a lady.

The "boss" soliciting orders and the clerk staying in a dirty, neglected store.

Handling candies with his hands instead of with a scoop.

JAPANESE COMMISSIONERS.

Four members of the Japanese trade commission passed through Montreal last Tuesday on their way to Ottawa. They were met by influential Japanese residents of Montreal and given a hearty reception. The Japanese commission consisting of about fifty men, all prominent in their own country, has been touring the United States and Canada with a view to establishing better trade relationships between the countries. The Canadian contingent is under the guidance of W. T. R. Preston, formerly Canadian Commercial Agent to Japan.

CANADIAN BOOKSELLER AND STATIONER'S SILVER JUBILEE.

The Bookseller and Stationer, of Toronto, with its September number celebrates its silver jubilee, having evolved out of Books and Notions, started by J. J. Dyas, of Toronto, during the month of August, 1884. Year by year the journal taken over in 1888, by the MacLean Publishing Co., gained in strength, usefulness and influence until now in its twenty-fifth year it may compare itself with the best book and stationery trade journals in America. This is due as much to the editorial management as to the enterprise of its publishers.

Since its establishment Bookseler and Stationer has been in charge of several editors, and it is in fact worth noting that each of these men have achieved distinction in the work he has since taken up. After the acquisition of the paper by the MacLean Publishing Co., the first editor was C. A. C. Jennings, who was in charge until the summer of 1892. Mr. Jennings is now one of the editors of the Toronto Mail and Empire. Following him for three years was John A. Cooper, M.A., who resigned in 1895 to accept the editorship of the Canadian Magazine, and who is now the managing editor of the Canadian Courier. After him the paper was under the editorial control of Frank Smith, who is to-day financial editor of the Toronto News. His successor was Dr. A. H. U. Colquhoun, M.A., LL.D., now Deputy Minister of Education of the Province of Ontario. In 1902 the present editor, W. A. Craick, suceeded Dr. Colquhoun, and has ever since been in charge.

In the name of the book trade of the United States, we offer congratulations coupled with the wish that our contemporary may enjoy many more years of usefulness and prosperity.—From Publishers' Weekly.

WANTS ONLY PURE SPICES.

Perth Merchant Appreciates Visit of the Food Inspector.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—J. G. Rickey, of the Inland Revenue Department, recently took a number of samples of pepper from stores in this town. Most 20th century grocers wish to handle pure goods only, so are glad to have their spices tested, looking upon this inspection as a safeguard to their own interests, and why should they not?

We buy from a wholesale spice house what is called pure pepper. If, upon analysis, this is found to be adulterated, we know where not to buy the next time. If, on the other hand, it is found to be as labeled, we are given greater confidence in our goods, greater confidence in our wholesale spice house, and we can, with full confidence, recommend our spices cheerfully to all customers.

Peculiar Conditions Existing in the Wheat Market — Flour Market Firm—No Changes in Cereal Markets, but Trade is Active.

MONTREAL.

There is perhaps nothing so difficult to understand as the wheat and flour markets, and it appears that the older dealers do not seem to bother their heads about it. Supply and demand do not seem to figure much in the calculations, but all depends on what the other fellow is going to do. One day wheat is up and the next day it is down again, and no one can, or cares to give the reasons why, but accepts the situation because it happened so. With the crops in almost every wheat-producing country in the world, in excess of the estimates, still wheat holds its price firmly, and even future deliveries are higher than for present deliveries. This in itself would indicate that prices are not expected to drop. The crop of the United States according to the government report is 50 million bushels in excess of last year and the Canadian crop in the Northwest is now estimated at about 120 to 125 million bushels. Russia increased her shipments last week by nearly a million bushels, and yet the market is strong with only slight variations.

Considerable anxiety or even alarm is felt at the fact that the largest part of our Northwest wheat for export finds its way out through the U. S. via Buffalo, instead of through Canadian routes. The cause of this is principally owing to cheaper insurance.

FLOUR.—The market is very strong at present prices, and trade is unusually brisk. No immediate change in the present low prices is expected. The total exports of wheat and flour from the United States and Canada for the past week were the largest since August 26th, 1908, showing an increase of 3,471,157 bushels over last week, and of 71,208 bushels over the corresponding week last year.

FLOUR.—The flour market is firm with an advance anticipated, although there is no change since last week. Wheat however has fluctuated several cents but has settled to a point not much removed from last week. If there is such a thing possible, it may be said that the natural feeling is bearish while the speculative feeling is bullish.

CROP EXCEEDED ESTIMATES.

Optimism Expressed by Vice-President of Ogilvie Flour Mills Co. at Annual Meeting.

The annual general meeting of the shareholders of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Ltd., was held at the head office of the company in Montreal on October 14th, 1909, C. R. Hosmer, president, in the chair.

The president's report gave a brief resume of the growth of the company during the year, one item of which was the acquirement of seventeen country elevators. In the vice-president's address the following interesting information was given :

"At the commencement of the Northwest harvest, our official estimate of the crop was placed at 115,000,000 bushels, but the results of the threshing returns to date indicate that the yields are over running expectations, and this estimate, in my judgment, will be very considerably exceeded. Over ninety per cent. of the crop inspected to date is high grade. The production of oats, barley and flax is also heavy, and prices for all agricultural products being at very remunerative figures to the producer must have the effect of creating prosperous conditions throughout the whole Dominion. I believe fundamental conditions are sound throughout Canada, and in consequence of our magnificent harvest and the financial returns resulting therefrom, there will naturally follow a steady and conservative expansion in all branches of trade."

The following gentlemen were elected directors of the company for the ensuing year :—

C. R. Hosmer, president ; F. W. Thompson, vice-president and managing director ; Sir George A. Drummond, K.C.M.G., Sir H. Montagu Allan, C.V.O., Sir Edward S. Clouston, Bart., H. S. Holt, Shirley Ogilvie.

And the following officers were appointed : W. A. Black, general manager Western Division ; S. A. McMurtry, treasurer ; T. Williamson, secretary ; G. A. Morris, assistant secretary ; F. H. Anson, general superintendent ; Lt.-

BURMA'S GREATEST INDUSTRY.

Two-thirds of the Land Produces Rice —How it is Cultivated.

In all Burma there are prabably 12,000,000 acres under cultivation, of which 8,000,000 acres are devoted to rice, says E. A. Wakefield, of Rangoon. Two-thirds of the entire cultivated area is in Lower Burma, and six-sevenths of this is paddy fields. In addition to this cultivated area there are arable tracts of unoccupied land aggregating 25,000,000 acres, waiting until the population is sufficiently large to provide cultivators.

The cultivation of rice—plowing, sowing, transplanting, and harvesting—is conducted in the most primitive manner. After reaping, the grain is separated from the plant by thrashing, rolling, or treading. It is then placed in bags or loaded in bulk into cargo boats for transportation to the mill. If for local consumption the rice is prepared in local mills, in the old-time primitive manner, but if intended for export it is shipped to Rangoon.

As Rangoon is the greatest rice port in the world, it is quite natural that the rice mills in and near the city should be distinctive industrial features. Many of these mills are of the most modern type, capable of handling very large quantities of rice, varying according to the quality of the rice to be milled.

Rice which has been highly polished is not considered by the Burman fit for food. Curry and rice, with a little meat or fish, is the ideal meal for a Burman. The rice available for export during the present season was estimated at 2,600,000 tons, valued roughly at $65,000,000. Burma rice is marketed in Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America, and Australia.

FIG SHIPMENTS HELD UP.

Conditions Under Which They are Packed Said to be Unsanitary.

A report comes from Washington, D. C., U.S.A., to the effect that shipments of Smyrna figs had been held up by the Department of Agriculture on account of alleged unsanitary packing conditions. As to the precise nature of these unsanitary conditions, officials decline to speak on the ground of a clause in the food law, which directs that in such cases the investigation of food conditions shall be kept private until such time as the facts in the case have been carefully examined and a decision rendered.

There was, however, general unanimity of opinion among the officials that the action taken in holding up the figs was warranted by the facts that had come to their knowledge in the inquiries thus far conducted. But, of course, nothing could be given out definitely.

E. L. Harris, the United States consul at Smyrna, has sent in a report which has been placed before the Department of Agriculture for careful examination and verification, pending which it is the intention to hold up the importation of figs, where release has been refused by the authority of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection.

Inquiries were made at some of the offices of Canadian importers regarding this situation, but none could be found who had heard anything of it. Shipments of figs have arrived in this country apparently in good condition, with nothing they claim, to warrant the action of the United States authorities. One expressed the opinion that the Pure Food Law in the United States was so mixed up on account of Federal and State laws, that results were sometimes ridiculous. Another did not believe that all fig shipments could have been held up, as many exporting houses packed them in such a manner that they will stand all investigation. Their figs were of the finest quality and packed in a superior manner and their sanitary condition could not be questioned. A third spoke along simlar lines, stating that he did not see why all shipments should be held up or why there should be any discrimination.

At any rate none had heard through cable or otherwise anything about the circumstances.

THE HOTEL CECIL.

As a first-class, comfortable hostlery, the Hotel Cecil, in Ottawa, has won its way into the regard of hundreds of commercial men, who cover the Capital. The patronage extended it by this class—to which it caters particularly—demonstrates the appreciation of the knight of the grip for perfect service in an excellently appointed house. Walter B. Walby, the proprietor, has been dealing with the traveling public for such a long time that he knows just what is desirable, and what should be eliminated. His new venture, The Cecil, he has made a most successful one, and he thanks the commercial travelers, in a large measure, for his success.—Advt.

Ryan, grocer, as chairman of the Finance Committee.

Compelling the Call-again

In our beloved Canadian Metropolis, Brother Grocer, the artful Street Railway exact Five Per.

But, if you invest a "quarter," you collar an extra ticket: you get six instead of five.

If, however, you spread yourself and "blow in" one whole dollar of the Hard-earned, you become the proud possessor of Five Free Fares. Surely, this is Unwonted Generosity, smacking of the "free, gratis for nothing"!

Well, hardly.

It is merely Good Business—it is to insure the "return of the Customer."

To make sure of that self-same dollar.

And to make sure of it they are willing to sacrifice 25 per cent

* * * *

Some members of the retailing fraternity hold the five-center so close to the eye that they fail to see the dollar in the offing.

To "bank" on the Come-again, Brother Grocer, are you willing to pay the price?

To sacrifice just a little immediate profit to-day for the sake of a bigger to-morrow?

To absorb out of your permanent profits the trivial difference between the "just as good" and the "has made good"?

The difference between "near good" flour and FIVE ROSES.

* * * *

Would it help some, Brother Grocer, to know that this Deceptive Difference in first cost is fast swallowed up in lost sales and shelf-staying proclivities. That instead of continued profit on "near-good" flour, you are in fact a loser on "Call-again" sales which the price of Satisfaction would have engendered.

FIVE ROSES, Brother Grocer, has never been surpassed.

Its quality is the ideal which so-called "best" brands are forever striving to attain.

Its name is the most copied and travestied of any flour brand in Canada (names on request.)

That so many, besides the FIVE ROSES legitimate retailers, are anxious to cash in on its reputation proves its Popularity with the housewife.

* * * *

And now, Brother Grocer, why should YOU take the minimum profit when the maxium profit is yours for the taking?

Don't you want to handle a Swift Seller and Repeater?

Wouldn't you like to sell FIVE ROSES?

RESPECT THE PASSERS-BY.

It is never good judgment for a retailer, or for that matter, any merchant, to so obstruct his sidewalk with packing boxes, ice or outside display, to such an extent that pedestrians must either go around or climb over, keep the front of your store neat if you wish the best results.

UNFAIR PORTERAGE CHARGE.

A delegation recently waited upon the Hon. Mr. Brodeur, with a view to improving the situation of Montreal importers as regards porterage charges at Quebec. It was pointed out that goods, landed at Quebec from one of the Empresses on a through bill of lading to Montreal, had to pay a porterage charge, whereas goods consigned to any other point paid none. The protest was lodged by thirty representative Montreal importers.

GREEN FRUITS—The fruit market, which has been a busy spot all summer, is beginning to look forsaken. Most of the fruits which arrived from day to day are no more. Peaches are still coming in small quantity, but of inferior quality. The irrepressible California peach, which has fought it way against our best varieties, has now again a fair show. Grapes are now practically owning the market, and are King there. In spite of the snow storm with threatened frost they escaped with very little injury, and are arriving daily in large quantities, and in splendid condition. They are selling for 12c to 15c per small basket, and are looking for buyers. Pears still hold a respectable position. Apples are receiving more attention and are selling from $1.50 to $2.50 per barrel. They are fall varieties and in many cases they are culls. The first car of Florida oranges arrived this week and will be sold for a dollar to a dollar and a half cheaper than the first arrivals last year. New lemons are also expected, in a few days, which means to the retailer—get rid of your old stock.

KEEPING FISH FRESH.

New Method Which is Just Being Introduced into Maritime Provinces.

Men engaged in the fish trade down by the sea are interested in a new method of handling fish that has been recommended by Inspector O'Reilly, who looked into the matter when he was in England giving expert advice to the counsel who were preparing the Colony's case for submission to The Hague tribunal. Each fish is wrapped in a specially prepared paper (the invention of Captain Solling, commissioner of the Danish Government Fisheries Department, and a man of reputation in British fishing circles), and then packed in ice. The moisture from the ice cannot touch the fish because of this envelope, but the cold water keeps the fish chilled or cool, and thus it will remain fresh for a longer period, as decomposition is slower in setting in, while the fish also retains its natural flavor. One firm in Fleetwood has been using this paper for nearly twelve months, and as an example of its efficiency, it is stated that they bought some turbot at 5s per stone, kept it fourteen days wrapped in this paper, ad then sold it at 14s per stone.

An article in the Fish Trades Gazette, of May 22, states that fish caught on the west coast of Greenland and Iceland were wrapped in Captain Solling's paper, and after a lapse of twenty-six days were delivered to the Grimsby market in such perfect condition that they were equal to fish just taken out of the water.

Results of the use of the paper in India with the temperature 90 degrees F. indoors are said to be equally good.

On the strength of Inspector O'Reilly's report, Sir Edward Morris, the Premier of Newfoundland, has ordered $200 worth of the paper, in order that experiments might be conducted with it in that Colony. It has also been arranged that Captain Solling shall come out to Newfoundland to set on foot the experiments.

THERE MAY BE BETTER WAYS.

Never become so set on doing business in one way that you will not take a better if it is demonstrated. Always be open for suggestions.

One Montreal grocer says he spends several hours each week with some of his fellow merchants, just to talk over new hints. "Read the best trade papers" is the maxim of another grocer.

H. Laporte, of Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, is expected back from the United States next week.

What a Millionaire Wholesale Grocer Says About Advertising in Trade Papers

"The advertising of wholesale grocers in trade papers is to be commended. The trade papers exist primarily to help in promoting the interests of the particular trades they represent, and they generally are filled with the latest trade news, advice, statistics. etc., pertaining to their field. Besides, it stands to reason that such advertising ought to be profitable in thus being directed right at prospective buyers."

The above is an extract from an address delivered by Mr. Martindale on "Advertising: Its Practice and Rewards," at a banquet given by the Canadian Club, of London, Ont., his former home. Mr. Martindale is one of the many Canadians who have won prominence as broad-gauged business men in the United States.

If Mr. Martindale were in business in Canada he'd be a large user of space in The Canadian Grocer. He realizes what a powerful agent advertising of this sort can be made in building up good-will among possible customers.

Read next week what Mr. Martindale says about houses of big capital and fine reputation that have tried to hold trade without advertising.

THE SURE SELLER.

WHY?

"SURPRISE" Soap is sold before it ever goes into your store.

You never have to think about bad soap stock if it is "SURPRISE," because everybody knows that "SURPRISE" is the best laundry soap in the country.

To you it is as negotiable as government bonds or coin of the realm.

"SURPRISE" is a bigger seller this year than it was last year, and it will be still bigger as the country's population increases.

On The Square

"Thistle" Canned Fish

Haddies packed under the "Thistle" brand are in lined tins. Absolutely clean, superior in flavor, because canned where caught. The favorites, because the choice of folks who are particular to always get the best.

Olsen & Kleppe Sardines

Quality Sardines that are packed "on the square." The "Albatross" brand for those who prefer small fish—the "Ambrosia" (equally as fine) for those who want fish a trifle larger. Packed in Norway and packed with scrupulous care, in pure Olive Oil.

Griffin & Skelley Fruits

Whether dried or canned, the "Griffin" brand of fruits is always the same high quality—the natural flavor is never wanting. Raisins, seeded or seedless, White and Green Asparagus, Prunes. The "Griffin" Brand assures that absolute satisfaction coincident with being "always on the square."

IF the line hangs plumb then go ahead and lay the foundations of business—if the spirit level rests fairly and squarely in the centre—then go ahead. If each timber in your structure dove-tails and is "on the square," then too go ahead.

Be "on the square" with "quality." Do not deceive yourself if the line hangs out of plumb, the spirit level be out of centre or the timbers fail to dove-tail.

"Be on the square" for your own and your customers' good.

WHY YOU SHOULD SELL MATHIEU'S SYRUP

of Tar and Cod Liver Oil

REASON NO. 1

Nine out of every ten people when troubled with a cough or cold call for Mathieu's Syrup.

Hence there is no time wasted in selling it. It almost sells itself. This is the result of its exceptional curative properties in all chest and throat complaints—backed up by good advertising.

This advertising consists of

1. Our newspaper campaign.

2. One person recommending it to another, and probably telling him that he got it at your store.

3. Dealers who know a good article when they see it and gladly recommend it to their customers and friends.

Let us have an order from you to-day.

Making Successful Salesmen from Your Employees

Salesmanship an Art and Must Be Studied—How to Overcome the Opposing Attitudes of Customers—Avoiding the Causing of Displeasure to Them—Personal Appearance Should be Kept in Mind.

By Frank Farrington.

There are plenty of clerks in retail stores who are ambitious to develop into first-class salesmen. There are plenty more who don't care if they develop into first-class stoughton bottles. There is a middle class that can be developed into salesmen if some energetic mind takes them in charge.

Salesmanship is the ability to sell goods. It ought to be the ability to sell goods so that they will give satisfaction to the buyer.

If there is a secret of successful salesmanship, that secret is courtesy. Courtesy has not a very scientific sound. It seems to incline more towards the opposite pole. The reason that it sounds wrong in that connection is that we confuse in our minds courtesy and politeness, two terms which are not interchangeable—not by a good, long shot.

To be courteous is to think of the feelings of another, to view any transaction from the other's point of view, and to incline toward generosity. To be courteous is to be polite at heart.

The form of salesmanship that was considered best fifty years ago was the kind based upon the every-man-for-himself principle, if that is a principle. When the buyer and the seller came together it was a case of "dog eat dog," or "diamond cut diamond"; and the plan worked out more satisfactorily than it would now because every man who set out to buy expected to be "trimmed" if the seller proved to be the sharper man. Nowadays there are so many men in the business of selling things "on the level" that the fellow who tries to follow the old method soon finds himself stranded.

The Scientific Plan.

You positively cannot succeed now with any kind of salesmanship but the honest kind. No other sort is scientific, practical, or useful in any way. It would not seem that there is need to reiterate such a statement, but one meets constantly with young men who have yet to learn that straight honesty in selling is of paramount importance.

The retail clerk probably finds much less temptation to dishonesty than the traveling salesman, upon whose individual sales so much of his own and his firm's success depends. With the retail clerk the failure to make a sale is usually simply so much less profit for his employer and makes no vital difference in his own immediate success. A lazy traveling salesman realizes that his tenure of job is affected by every failure and by every success. He knows that to land a good prospect to-day is a feather in his cap to-night, while to wait to land him next trip may be a feather in someone else's cap before that next trip comes 'round. Consequently, there is great temptataon to make the sale now, make it as big a sale as possible, and get the bird into the hand.

The value of honesty is in a direct ratio as the temptation to dishonesty. The more the temptation to trick the customer, the more necessary it is that he be treated fairly. In the store a customer may be cheated in an unimportant sale and never know it. In a store many sales are unimportant. On the road many sales are relatively unimportant, but rarely so much so that that the buyer will not be permanently disaffected by unfair or dishonest treatment.

The retailer who is himself careless about the treatment of his customers will not stand a bit of the same treatment from his jobber.

Good salesmanship then seems to mean, among other things, honest salesmanship.

The reason that more clerks do not become salesmen is just the same reason that more men do not become successes. They do not try. Success is in most men, probably in all men in some degree, if they would but try to get it out.

Nine men in ten fail to make the most of themselves; not because they do not have the chance, not because they do not know or cannot find out how; but because they do not care enough about it to make the effort. The one ferment that must be implanted in a man's mind to hake him struggle all his life for success is that of ambition. Once get ambition seething in a man's brain and it stands a good chance to make him amount to something. Without that desire to surpass, to get ahead, to lead the whole procession or some division of it, he stands little chance of ever leading anything.

You can became a good salesman even if you at first lack all the prime essentials. There are men born with the selling ability in their mouths, like the traditional gold spoon. And to be born with an obvious talent is a thousand times better than being born with a mouth full of gold spoons. But better be born with energy, enthusiasm, ambition and no talent than with a talent and no ambition to make that talent of value.

We know plenty of men who have a talent that ought to be making them leaders. They are straggling along somewhere in the rear. They are hanging over bars or holding down the extra chairs in front of cheap hotels, just because they haven't the determination, or even the desire, to get to work with their talent.

Would you be a salesman? Then make up your mind that you will be a salesman, and set about becoming one, and no man shall stop you. Will power is greater than the greatest obstacle.

Study people. Study your customers. Study yourself. The greatest study for the man who is to handle people is people. The only way to succeed with this study is to keep at it until success does come, until what in others seemed at first to be hypnotism becomes merely the knowledge of how to lead the mind opposed to you.

Salesmanship an Art.

In selling goods you meet with many variations of attitude. But after all they may be divided into two groups—the opposing attitude and the friendly or favoring attitude. The customer whose attitude is favorable requires no urging. He has come to buy a certain article and does not require encouragement.

The opposing attitude is what causes all the trouble and makes salesmanship an art instead of a mechanical process.

The status of the customer must first be discovered. It must be located as friendly or otherwise. If opposite, then comes the battle of the wits; your own striving to outreason the other, to show that the purchase is desirable, even necessary; the other striving to show that it is not necessary, that it is even detrimental.

The man or woman buying goods is interested in those goods more than in you or your methods. The effects or results of what you do will be what the customer will note in the end. The way you do it is unimportant to him. You must know as far as possible, and as intimately as your circumstances will allow, the personality of the various people to whom you are to try to sell goods. Extend your personal acquaintance just as far as it can be extended.

When you go into a man's office, or when he comes into your store, if you greet him with a cordial "Good morning," it will be pretty hard for him to turn you down in cold blood. If you simply give him a meaningless "Good morning," the greeting does not open the way to anything more. There is no personality in it for either the customer or yourself.

The harder you make it for the buyer to be cold and distant, the easier you make it to sell him goods. Get him warmed up to a point where he must take an interest in spite of himself, and the sale is pretty well sprouted.

What is back of the greeting and the smiling countenance has a great deal to do with the results it accomplishes. A customer may thaw out under a smiling greeting if it comes from a man who is pleasant spoken, well dressed, and correct in language, while from a chap in soiled linen and having a boisterous manner, ungrammatical speech, or an ill-smelling breath, or any one of a dozen unpleasant personal qualities, he may be repelled, no matter what the words are that come from the mouth of the ill-omened individual.

Avoid Displeasing a Customer.

Customers are of many kinds and many notions. They represent all varieties of temperament and disposition and no salesman may know what the particular idiosyncrasy of any one is until experience has taught him, perhaps too late.

There is only one way to avoid the possible displeasing of the customer, and that is to avoid doing or saying or being anything that could in any way be offensive to anyone. That is a pretty large contract, but like any other proposition that might be too much to handle, if you can't achieve perfection, come as near to it is you can. If you can't be perfect, be as perfect as you can.

With women it is especially necessary that the salesman avoid possible unpleasant mannerisms. An unpleasant voice may drive away trade. It can be prevented to voice culture, a few lessons from someone who knows how the voice ought to be trained. An evil breath can be prevented by a little care of the mouth, teeth, and stomach, and these ought to get care enough for that without waiting for the necessity of doing on account of customers.

Mourning bordered finger-nails call for prompt treament or they will drive away fastidious trade. Same with unkempt hair, or collars and cuffs worn too long. Neatness is, or should be, a cardinal principle of salesmanship. Without neatness, a glib tongue and a knowledge of mankind can avail little.

NEW RAISIN TRUST.

A $1,000,000 trust has recently been floated by California raisin growers to control the price of that fruit. A five year selling agreement has been signed by most of the men prominent in the industry. The organization took place at Fresnau, Cal.

ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS.

Sometimes anonymous letters find their way to one of the offices of The Canadian Grocer. These communications are usually of such a character that they could not be published unless we know the name and address of the writer; principally as a matter of good faith. Not long ago the Toronto office of The Grocer received a communication from someone signed "Baird Lovechild" with nothing else to indicate who the author was. It could not of course be published.

Every communication must bear the signature of the writer or firm expressing the opinion, not necessarily for publication but as a matter of good faith.

Original Methods of Orangeville Merchants

The Value of Treating Children Kindly — Grocer's Ideas on How the Delivery Department Should be Watched — Farmers Think They are Being Treated Unfairly—Advisability of Running an Honest Business.

Special correspondence.

Orangeville, Ont., Oct. 28.—The stores in Orangeville are, as a rule, well kept and are a credit to this town. They ought to be able to give the people in this part of the country nearly all the service they require. There are three merchants who handle groceries exclusively, and they are up to date.

Quite a number keep general stores and carry groceries as one of their lines. These stores are well managed and the different lines kept separate and in place.

All big things are made up of little things, and sometimes little things are big in themselves. A little girl came into one of these grocery stores recently and showed considerable bashfulness. The proprietor at once met her with a smile that only comes to a kind man's face, and said, "What can I do for you, Queeny?" When the litt'e girl was served, and had reached the door she turned round to catch the eye once more of the man who had treated her so kindly, and then called out, "Good bye, Mr. ——."

To treat children properly has a great advertising value, besides the satisfaction it brings through their thorough appreciation of kindness.

Evolution of Better Methods.

The aim to improve trade mehods is apparent everywhere. Cleanliness is a special feature with all up-to-date grocers. One of the Orangeville grocers remarked that even the delivering has to be done in altogether a different style from that of some years ago. It is very well to have a clean store, but unless the delivery corresponds with the store, it spoils it all. It does not matter how neatly and carefully goods are put up, if they are delivered in dirty boxes, by a dirty slovenly driver, the customer will not be satisfied.

Another one, said, "I used to be a farmer, and I was laboring, like the most of the farmers are, under the impression that merchants were constantly taking advantage of us. Since I am in the retail business I have entirely changed my mind, and I now realize that honesty in business can alone make it a success." He, like many others, feels the necessity of cultivating a more friendly feeling and giving farmers a better understanding of trade conditions.

Trouble Caused by Ignorance.

Most men like to be fair, and if they appear to be unreasonable in business matters, they are simply ignorant of something they ought to know. Never in the history of Canadian merchandizing was there such an awakening to the importance of truthful methods and practices in buying and selling. Through ignorance people are suspicious, and imagine they are not treated fairly, and they wander round, waste their time in searce of something better than they can get at their own doors.

A certain writer says, "that a man in business who tries to conduct business on dishonest lines is a fool." This idea will be endorsed by every prosperous merchant, and on this fact the consuming public should be enlightened.

There is no system that can give the people in general as good service as the retail stores in towns and villages throughout the country, and if this is once understood, and prejudice and misconception removed, the people will naturally support their local stores, and will cease to support institutions which interfere with their best interests.

NO VINEGAR MERGER YET.

At a meeting of the leading vinegar manufacturers of Canada, held in the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, recently, it was decided to postpone any action regarding a merger until winter, as the bulk of the orders have already been placed for fall trade. In preparation for the spring it is expected a selling agreement will be entered into by the leading makers. At present, they claim, there is hardly a living margin in vinegars.

A report was published by a Montreal daily paper that there was to be a ginger ale merger. The foundation for the report was a meeting of several men in the trade, who have been holding such meetings for the past three years, with a view to protecting themselves from having other makers use their bottles. From all present indications the "merger" will not go beyond this stage for some time to come.

Successful Methods Adopted by Canadian Grocers

Halifax Grocer Believes in Getting Rid of Old Stock Before the New is Offered For Sale—No More Late Saturday Night Deliveries in Bracebridge—How Enterprise and Advertising Helped Western Merchant—The Need of Proper Shelf Arrangement—Value of a Catch Phrase in Advertising.

Care in Advertisements.

Montreal, October 26.—So many grocers make the mistake of trying to put the names of half their goods in an advertisement. One of the most judicious advertisers among Montreal retailers recently commented on this fact. "I always specialize one or two good lines each issue and devote my space to their exploitation. It pays best in the end. People haven't time to use a magnifying glass on small type items."

Another Graft on the Merchant.

Chatham, Oct. 26.—Another means of levying tribute upon the merchant has just come to light, in the shape of the school "corn fair."

A couple of schools in this vicinity are this fall holding corn fairs under the auspices of the Ontario Corn Growers' Association. Recently representatives of the schools canvassed the merchants here for prizes for these fairs.

President Westman of the Retail Merchants' Association was among those canvassed, but stuck to his guns, resolutely refusing a donation of any kind, though he was, it is understood, threatened with the loss of a substantial plumbing job if he didn't comply with the request. A few merchants contributed, though contributions seem to have been given chiefly by non-members of the association, the members backing up the president in his refusal to contribute.

The matter was discussed at the R. M. A. meeting last week, when it was unanimously decided that the "corn fair" came under the ban of the association, which some time ago decided that members must not give prizes of any kind.

A Coffee Window.

Chatham, Oct. 26.—A coffee window was featured in H. Malcolmson's grocery last week, which, while simply designed, attracted considerable attention. Mounted on a box at the back of the window was placed the firm's handsome new electric coffee grinder, flanked on each side by bags of green or unroasted coffee beans. In front of this were ranged wooden basins containing, respectively, green and roasted Mocha and green and roasted Java coffee beans. Each variety was conspicuously labeled, the whole forming a sort of object lesson in coffee. A basin of the Mocha and Java mixture, unground, which retails at 40c. a pound and which is one of the firm's best lines, was also displayed, in addition to cheaper lines.

The display attracted much attention from the very fact that it was something away out of the run of the ordinary, highly colored window display.

Sweet Potatoes in Kent.

Chatham, Oct. 26.—There was recently on exhibition in E. R. Snook's grocery here a sweet potato grown upon the farm of Jas. Livingston in Harwich township, a few miles from Chatham.

The sweet potato was propagated from one of the ordinary southern tubers, being sown at the same time and in the same manner as Mr. Livingston's Irish potatoes, and cultivated in much the same way. The sample shown, which was one of a number raised, weighed 4¾ pounds. It was considerably larger than the usual run of imported potatoes, and instead of being brownish yellow was rather pink in color.

It is possible that farmers here will experiment more largely with the crop next year.

Unfair to Country Buyers.

Bracebridge, Oct. 26—A short time ago there was a holiday here to allow all who wished to accompany the lacrosse team to Toronto to plan a final game. The habit of closing stores other than on legal holidays is considered to be entirely wrong by many merchants here. The towns-people, of course, know all about the holiday and prepare themselves accordingly. But its unfair to the country folks who drive miles to town on shopping trips only to find the "closed" sign hanging out.

Clearing Out Old Stocks.

Halifax, October 26.—"I have great difficulty" remarked a large retail grocer here, "to get my salesmen to sell off the old goods first."

Here is a problem which is causing worry among many merchants throughout Canada. They buy new goods and the salesman and salesladies shove back the old into the farthest corners of the shelves so that eventually there are many dollars worth of goods almost too dirty and too stale to offer for sale.

This is exactly what the Halifax grocer has to contend with. He says he loses custom every year through no other reason, and while his otherwise progressive methods attract new ones all the time, yet he might be further ahead at the end of the year providing the old goods were all sold before the first of the new stock. He explains at different times the necessity of putting forward the finish of every stock before the various departments are replenished. Nevertheless the salesmen neglect in many cases to carry out the instructions so that frequently losses occur because stale goods reach good customers.

He believes that other merchants have the same trouble and he wants to know a remedy that will cause his salesmen, who otherwise are good men, to be more careful in watching stocks.

Late Deliveries Eliminated.

Bracebridge, Oct. 27.—On Saturday night last, the grocers discontinued the delivery of parcels ordered after six o'clock. Due notice had been given in both town papers for three issues back and also dodgers were distributed. The new regulation established by the grocers was a complete success the first night. Every merchant, clerk and delivery man are congratulating themselves on the step taken. Best of all, nearly every citizen of Bracebridge feels that the right course has been taken and all are joining hands with the grocers to complete the success.

It's up to other towns to follow the path the Bracebridge grocers have pursued.

Last Saturday night at half past ten all the blinds were drawn and most of the stores shut up, where before they would keep open nearly till Sunday morning.

Enterprise and Advertising.

Fillmore, Sask., October 25.—Because he learned the value of enterprise and printers' ink, J. L. Forrest, business manager of the Fillmore Trading Co., is making a success of the business of which he is head.

Mr. Forrest has had a varied experience in the business world. Immediately prior to his first trip west he gained valuable experience in a general store situated in Hepworth, Ont. From there he journeyed westward and found a far rougher country than any of the later generation can conceive. In the fall of 1889 he secured a situation in a general store at Deloraine, Man., where he remained two years, afterwards holding a traveling position with McAllister & Watts and Hicks Bros. & Co., successively.

His road experience was followed by a bankrupt stock brokerage business in which line he gained an insight into business systems and shrewd buying methods that could be gained no other way. While following that line he took advantage of an opportunity to buy out S. R. Carrothers' general store in Creelman. At this stand he did a rushing business until in the fore part of last December his store and stock were destroyed by fire. Dysart was the scene of his next venture, but owing to the great number of foreigners and his own inability to speak their language, he pulled up stake there in August and brought his stock to Fillmore. Just a few weeks ago he opened for business here and states that the volume of business transacted has surpassed his highest expectations and also that the future looks bright. Mr. Forrest has only himself to blame for the success of this business.

To Have Modern Store Front.

Rosthern, Sask., October 25.—J. J. Frieson's general store at Laird will be quite a fine building when the improvements now under way are completed. When finished the store will be 46 x 24 feet. A splendid store front is to be put on, and the shelving and silent salesmen, etc., which are being installed, go to make the store a modern one.

Improving the Store.

Red Deer, Alta., October 25.—Gaetz & Gaetz, general merchants, Red Deer, have recently been making extensive improvements in their premises. The store to the east, formerly occupied by F. H. Tallman as a hardware store, has been nicely fitted up as a grocery department, and the old stand will be devoted entirely to dry goods, boots and shoes, etc. Extensive improvements have been made throughout, and the two stores are connected by a large arch. The stock will be considerably enlarged, preparing for the increase of trade which is expected for the coming winter months.

Proper Shelf Arrangement.

Montreal, October 26.—A good system of shelving goods is an asset to any grocer. A Montreal merchant, who takes a great deal of care in this particular has given his ideas on the subject. "Goods are not lost if you have a place for them; make it a point to keep your shelves neat and have a list of what is in each compartment, with a place for checking off what is sold, pasted or hung up beside it. You will find it much simpler in renewing stocks as you can instantly see how much is left."

Small Courtesies Count.

Quebec, October 26.—So many "little" things enter into the career of a successful retailer that it is often hard to tell which are most important. In talking to a Quebec grocer on the subject, he gave a few of his ideas.

"The greatest aid to a grocer in holding his trade, is to jump at a chance to do small favors for customers. For instance, a lady enters the store, carrying a rather awkward package. It is a simple thing to suggest that it can just as well be sent home for her with her purchases."

There are many other "little" courtesies that can be shown to customers. Just think out a few and use them.

Clerks Using Savings Banks.

St. John, N.B., October 25.—"My clerks all keep a savings account," said a St. John retailer recently. "I make it a condition in employing a new man, that he deposit part of his salary every week. They soon get in the habit of it and I find it the surest way to prevent debt and dissipation among my employees."

This is a suggestion which will help both employer and clerk, and harms no one.

Pointers About Store Signs.

Lindsay, October 27.—The town council here is at present having framed a by-law to regulate the erection of store and hanging signs as well as signs on posts.

As a number of signs will no doubt be removed would it not be well for the grocer or any other merchant to consider something about a new sign. Attractive signs are good advertisement. That fact will not be questioned. Sometimes merchants are prone to let their signs get in a shabby condition, but on a recent visit to other towns and cities your correspondent was surprised to see the number of beautiful signs used by merchants elsewhere. Lindsay as yet has not many electrical signs, but they are not the only attractive kind. Perhaps there is no position on a store front so valuable for advertising purposes than the space below, around and on top of the window, especially below. The eye of the passer by is naturally attracted to the surface when looking into the windows and a bright and neatly designed sign will be sure to tell him something.

Electrical signs look well when placed above the doorway or the window, but a good sign for the bottom of the window noticed in Chatham might be mentioned. It was made of chipped glass, and strange to say this class of sign is becoming popular not because it is brilliant at night, but also in the day time. The sun and the light create a brilliancy that cannot help but attract attention.

Value of a Catch Phrase.

Chatham, October 27.—"Get it at Parks'" is the very catchy expression which has been utilized with good results in connection with the business and advertising campaign of a local drug store.

The legend has been worked into the texture of business operations in several ways.

In connection with the firm's advertising a two column engraving with the words "Get it at Parks'" in neat, plain and striking script has been used instead of setting up the firm name in the usual styles of type.

Neat "stickers" with the words in white script on a colored background are pasted to every parcel which goes out of the store. The colors used have been red and blue. A rubber stamp with the same words in the same style of script is used for stamping medicine bottles.

The expression is also used on bill heads and letterheads, the script being, as usual, the style of lettering employed.

Finally, the words, "Get it at Parks'," in big, white script appears upon a large black sign placed above the store premises. At night this sign is lighted by incandescent bulbs, and attracts much attention.

The use of these "catch words" has undoubtedly proved very helpful to the firm in its efforts to extend its business. The expression speedily "caught on," and, if the number of times it was repeated in casual conversation was any indication, it must have helped materially to keep the business before the public.

The words, "2 Doors East of Market," in much smaller type, were used in connection with stickers, stamp, etc., to indicate the location of the business.

NEW SUGAR REFINERIES.

An Unprecedented Activity in This Industry in Canada.

Within the past two weeks announcement has been made of the formation of three new sugar refining companies in Canada. Two of those were mentioned in last week's issue of The Grocer—the Western Sugar Refining Co., with head office in Toronto, and the Vancouver Sugar Refining Co. The third will establish a refinery in St. John, N.B.

The man most interested in the Western Sugar Refining Co. is Andrew Shaw Grant, a Presbyterian clergyman, now residing in Toronto. So far the company has not decided upon the location of the factory and this information is not expected for a couple of weeks yet. Mr. Grant has gone west and it will likely be made known upon his return.

While no definite announcement has yet been made, it is practically a certainty that the sugar refinery in which F. C. Durant, of New York, and M. H. Day are interested, will be established at St. John, N.B. A St. John despatch says that the refinery will cost $2,000,000, and employ at least 300 men. It will be operated by a company working under a Canadian charter. It anticipates shipping 3,000 barre's or packages of sugar per day and to have a pay-roll approximately at least $3,000 per week. In addition to this, there will be a kindred cooperage industry to provide barrels and packages. The establishment of the sugar refinery in St. John will give a great impetus to the trade between St. John and the British West Indies, as practically all the raw sugar used will be brought here from those island . When seen, recently and asked as to the developments of the industry, Mr. Durant said: "I am hermetically sealed. I have nothing to say." It was learned later, however, that the facts are about as stated here, and St. John as the locality for the sugar refinery is about decided upon. Mr. Day is connected with the Consumers Cordage Co., Montreal.

It is also rumored that another refinery is under consideration for Montreal, but as yet no information is to hand.

The Chatham Board of Trade is in negotiation with a United States concern, which proposes to establish a sugar factory there. The board has prepared a proposition which involves a loan from the city of $50,000, repayable with interest at 4 per cent., together with the usual exemptions and free water privileges. It is understood the company desires to secure local capital as an evidence of the sympathy of Chatham capitalists.

DETAILS OF THE CHRISTMAS CONTESTS.

The Canadian Grocer in last week's issue announced the beginning of our annual Christmas window dressing and retail advertising competition which closes on December 1st. This is done with a view to encouraging a greater interest in holiday displays and holiday advertising. If both are performed in the proper manner they will be found to be of much selling value to merchants.

Following last year's precedent, window dressing contestants will be divided into two classes:

For the best selling window display shown in (1) a city over 10,000 population, and (2) in towns and villages under 10,000 population.

In the window display contest in each case there will be two prizes as follows: 1st, $7 in cash; 2nd, $3 in cash, making in all $20.

To enter the contest send a good, clear photo of one or more Christmas windows, with a description and the name of the person who arranged the display. Photos must be mailed to us not later than December 31.

Most grocers use increased newspaper space during the Christmas season with a view to booming holiday trade. We want to get copies of these advertisements.

The advertisement submitted should be about Christmas goods sold through grocery stores. All that is necessary is to forward one or more clippings from your local paper to us with the name of the writer of the advertisement, and the name of the paper it was clipped from. There will be a prize of $5 cash given to the winner.

The award will be made by an advertising specialist and will be announced, with a reproduction of the prize ad., shortly after the close of the contest. All entries in each case should be mailed not later than December 31 to the Editor of The Canadian Grocer.

Best Methods of Displaying Goods in the Store

Need of Looking After the Interior as Well as the Window—Disadvantages of Showing Stale Goods and Having Old Boxes and Barrels Lying Around—Quality More Than Quantity Necessary in the Science of Selling.

There is always a good deal said about the window display, but if goods in other parts of the store are not correspondingly displayed, the effect of the windows will not produce the desired results.

The appearance of the whole store shows the character of the grocer, and by having a well-dressed window and the rest of the store in a slovenly condition it at once conveys the idea of petty deception. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link and so one neglected part of the store is its standard. The aim in displaying goods must not be to make a picture or build up something which takes the attention away from the goods themselves. Everything must be arranged so that the goods attract attention rather than the way they are placed. It is not quantity you want to show, but the goods in such a way that they will tempt people to buy them. A large stack of tea chests, full or otherwise, only occupy space without making an impression of much value. Hundreds of bottles of jam or pickles covered with dust do not induce a customer to buy as much as a single clean and fresh looking one. Barrels and boxes to fill up the store give the place a slovenly appearance. Soap boxes are nothing tempting to look at. Lots of goods carelessly displayed drive people away rather than tempt them to buy. Do you think a dozen boxes of raisins, currants, or prunes standing open, and exposed to dust and dirt will make many sales? How often have you seen a customer taking a look at goods and when you asked her whether she wished any she would say—No not to-day?

That lady looked at them because she wanted some, but when she seen the condition they were in, she made the excuse that she did not want any to-day.

A Large Percentage.

Over fifty per cent. of the goods as they are displayed in a great many stores drive customers away. Far better have a clean counter with nothing on it, than a dirty one piled up with dusty goods. A store now-a-days is not supposed to be a warehouse in confusion, but an orderly-kept place where goods are displayed in the best possible condition for people to buy, and the first essential thing to do is to please the eye. It does not matter much how good the goods are, if they are presented in a slovenly, uncleanly manner, the chances are that the customer will not want any to-day.

All progressive grocers are adopting new methods in conducting their business and there is nothing that appeals so much to the people at the present time as clean, sanitary goods. The first thing almost any lady thinks about when she buys anything for the table is whether it is clean, and the grocer who can keep up the cleanest appearance in his store and show the greatest regard to cleanliness in handling the goods will be the one who will do the business. The old idea of piling up boxes, barrels, etc., to make the appearance of carrying a heavy stock is out of date and means stale old goods.

Just for a moment think of the idea of piling up a large quantity of any kind of goods with the object in view of leading customers to think that you do an immense business. They come in for months and see the same old pile undisturbed. Nothing can have a more demoralizing effect and make customers more tired of your place than to see the same goods for months and months every time they come to the store. Why then have them there at all? Why have any goods standing round which are not required?

When Goods Should be Displayed.

Goods can only be displayed to advantage when they either remind the customer that she needs them or else that the quality is such that the appearance will induce her to buy. Instead therefore of having the store crowded with packages of every description and too many to be properly cared for, why not have less on your shelves and in your store, and show your goods by samples nicely kept, changed and fixed up in an attractive way each day? All that is necessary to introduce this method is to convince your customers that they always get the goods exactly the same as the sample.

This system would allow all the rough looking packages to be removed from the store to the warehouse, and the store would have an entirely different appearance. Every article in the store, as well as the fixtures and the store itself, could be kept clean and attractive. With the general "wake up" to the necessity of better service and better methods which is now in evidence all over the country it is altogether likely that a wonderful change in the display of the goods will have to take place.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

Two cars containing 1,500 gross of "2 in 1" shoe polish passed through Toronto on the 27th instant per C.P.R. leaving Montreal on Saturday's steamer for Australia. This is the second large shipment of "2 in 1" that has been shipped to Australia this year.

RED ROSE TEA EXHIBITION COUPONS.

Many grocers and general merchants in Ontario have customers who had a cup of "good tea" and enjoyed it in the Red Rose Tea Room at the Toronto Exhibition this year. Everyone who paid five cents for a cup of tea got a coupon worth five cents as part payment for a package of Red Rose Tea if bought within 60 days. Any of your customers who have these coupons will appreciate your reminding them that the time for redeeming them is nearly up, and the suggestion may be the means of your selling a few extra pounds of tea or perhaps getting a new customer. Any Red Rose Tea traveller will redeem the coupons, or they will be promptly paid for if sent to the Toronto office, 3 Wellington St. East.—Advt.

SCARCITY OF BUTTER IN HALIFAX.

Conditions of Trade in the Capital of Nova Scotia.

Halifax, N.S., October 27, 1909.

Halifax dealers report a scarcity of first quality creamery and dairy butter. The receipts of butter of ordinary quality have been fairly heavy, but there is little choice stock offering at the present time. The market is firm and prices have a tendency to advance. Creamery prints are now selling at 27 to 28 cents per pound and dairy at 23 cents. The chese market at present is about stationary and there has been no change in the price. Higher prices had been looked for as it was reported that some of the cheese factories had decided to manufacture butter instead of cheese, but this apparently has had no effect on the price of cheese. There is a fairly good supply of eggs on the market. Several small lots of fresh laid stock arrived recently and the demand is fairly good for the season of the year. Fresh laid stock is selling at 26 cents per dozen.

The produce markets are now active and large quantities are coming in daily. The potato crop is reported on the average to be pretty good this year and large shipments are again being made to the Cuban market. All the potatoes sent to Cuba are grown in Nova Scotia, and so far this season several thousand barrels have been shipped direct. Good prices are obtained for this stock. The quality of the early crop of Prince Edward Island potatoes was not very good but the later growth is reported to be much better.

The market was well supplied with poultry for Thanksgiving and the quality of the stock excellent, but the prices high. Turkeys are selling at 23 to 25 cents per pound and chickens from $1 to $1.50 per pair. So far this season no poultry has been imported from Ontario.

Nicholson & Brock, Toronto, have moved from 9 Jarvis Street, to 9 and 11 Francis Street.

Thos. O. Baxter, Toronto, has recently been appointed representative of Brand & Co., London, England. His offices are now at 27 Front St., East, Toronto; they were fomerly in Manning Chambers.

When a customer comes in with an unsatisfactory article, take it back quickly. Customers do not, as a general rule, carry back an article unless they feel there is good reason. If you instantly, and without argument, replace it, you will strengthen your position with that customer, arguing only leaves an unpleasant memory in her mind, even if you can convince here she was in the wrong.

Department in Aid of Retail Grocery Salesmen

Qualifications of the Ideal Clerk—Duties of an Employer in Training His Salesmen—Work Should be Done in Harmony—The Value of Encouragement.

By A Store Salesman.

A question of importance to every merchant, whether the store under his control is large or small, is that of securing suitable help.

This suitable help may be secured by simply hiring some salesmen, who have been carefully trained by some other merchant, but in most cases to-day the manager or owner of the store must take the inexperienced and train them to that point of efficiency where they will be able to carry on their share of the business to the satisfaction of all concerned.

This being the case, the problem of the training of the salesman in the store is a very important one. The ideal clerk from a merchant's point of view would be one who was honest, faithful and polite, whose influence both in the store and out of it would tend to the advancement of the business. He should be willing to learn and willing to do what he had learned, he should stand by the merchant in a tight place, or bringing all into a few words, he should be one who would take a real wide-awake active interest in the business.

Begin With Good Material.

Before we can train we must have clerks to train. As far as possible a merchant should pick young people from good homes. If he has good material to start with, the training has more liklihood of success.

It is a very good plan, where possible, to work with the helper until he becomes to some extent acquainted with at least a part of what is to be his routine work. Most boys enter a store with a desire to get ahead and if taken in the right way and shown that their employer really takes an interest in them they will quickly learn.

A merchant should not discourage his salesmen. He should be patient. Correct him when he makes mistakes, but don't forget some time when some work is well done to mention that fact.

Let each one, even to the delivery boys understand that his part is important, that no matter how well all of the others do their work, if he neglects his there is a flaw in the whole organization.

Show that you place some confidence in him. If he wishes to dress a window —work which he has not before tried— let him try and don't bother him while he is doing it. His plan may be as good as yours, even if you don't see how he will work it out.

When he has finished, criticize it kindly and show how it might be improved if you wish, but let him use his own brains in putting it together.

Give each salesman a portion of the daily work to do and let him understand that he is responsible for that part. Know what you wish done before giving your orders. Your clerk can not place full confidence in you, if you change your mind a couple of times, while speaking to him.

Work in Spare Minutes.

Impress upon each the value of odd minutes. It is these that count in the appearance of the store. A little dusting, the pulling forward and straightening of goods on the shelves, the filling of the candy case or the rearranging of goods on the counters may be done in these spare moments, and it is these things which give your store that fresh, cheery appearance.

Work will always be done more willingly if the merchant says, "Jack, don't you think that counter would look better straightened up?" than if he were to say, "Jack you must straighten up that counter."

If business was better last month than the same month last year, mention the fact to your clerks—in other words don't keep them in entire ignorance of this part of the business. You might add that you believed that if all worked together this month the business would be ahead again. Your clerks then think they really have something to work for and will probably become more interested in helping forward this month's business than in wishing for closing time.

Have trade papers kept where clerks can have easy access to them. Encourage them to take papers home, to read them, to keep posted on market tendencies and reports.

Let a clerk help in the buying. Ask for his advice and let him help you. If he has helped buy an article, his wish to sell it is greater than if he had had nothing to do with the purchase.

Good Salesmen Should be Kept.

When you have a good clerk, use every reasonable means to hold him. If he is earning more wages than he is receiving don't wait until he asks for an increase before raising his salary. If you use a clerk right he will usually use you right, and will be loyal to you in and out of the store.

On the other hand if a clerk is not earning his salary don't hesitate to let him go. Do it in a kindly way, but do it. You cannot afford to keep him. There is some truth in the statement in "Letters from a Self Made Merchant to His Son"—"Be slow to hire and quick to fire."

Teach your clerks to be gentlemen, show them that it is their loss only when they lose their temper before a customer.

Clerks may have some ideas how things might be improved in the store. Encourage them to mention these things to you. Have as far as possible a perfect understanding between yourself and your clerk. If you have this, your business cares will be fewer and your business success perhaps greater.

ENTHUSIASM AMONG SALESMEN.

There is no better element to have in your store than enthusiasm among your salespeople. Have some system for originating and keeping up this spirit. For instance, a merchant might offer prizes for the best sales during the month. If you have a line which should be pushed, offer a prize for the best monthly sales in that line. Any legitimate method to make it an object to your clerks to sell more goods is well worth what little extra it will cost.

... DUTY ON CREAM CHANGED.

A despatch from Ottawa says that J. A. Ruddick, Dominion dairy commissioner, calls attention to the unexpected advantage accruing to Canadian dairymen as a result of the adoption of the new tariff in the United States. Under the old tariff the duty on cream was five cents per pound. Under the new tariff it is five cents per gallon. The change is thought to have been a clerical error, but the effect of it is to send a large quantity of Canadian cream across the border. Some twelve or fifteen creameries have already begun to ship their whole output of cream, which nets the patrons about 27 cents per pound of fat.

[Editorial Note]—The duty on cream going from here to the United States being 5 cents per gallon, whether it was so intended or is a clerical error, it certainly opens up a profitable outlet for our butter in the shape of cream. The duty on butter is three cents a pound, or equal to about 16½ cents for the butter contained in a gallon of cream. The buttermilk should pay the duty, so that the butter practically goes over free in the form of cream.

TRADE NOTES.

The east and west walls of the Postum Cereal Co.'s new factory in process of building at Windsor, Ont., were blown down last week.

Frank Cockburn, Montreal manager for the Pugsley, Dingman Co., is at present on his semi-annual trip to Winnipeg and the west. He will be gone about three weeks.

The Food Product Section of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association have had printed several copies of the proposed new Food Standards and distributed them out through the country to the different members. When sufficient time has been given to thoroughly study the act, a meeting will be called to go into the question thoroughly.

Turtle Window that Increased Trade 50 Per Cent.

Montreal Retailer Exhibits Immense Turtle Weighing 1,500 pounds—A Fish Window that Quickly Paid for Itself — Attracted Large Crowds and Sold the Goods.

The accompanying cut will give some idea of the tremendous size of the largest turtle ever caught. The figures regarding this amphibian are astonishing. It weighs over 1,500 lbs. and measures nine f et five inches from the tip of its nose to the end of its tail. Its age is estimated at over 1,000 years.

The turtle was caught in Canadian waters, near Lunenberg, Nova Scotia, by John J. Hill, who, with other fishermen, was seining for mackerel. As the net was drawn to the beach, the fishermen felt the heavy weight in it. When the monster was seen they became frightened and ran away. Gaining courage, finally, they hauled it out on the beach. Being primarily a land animal, the turtle, entangled in the net, had been drowned, so there was no danger to be apprehended.

No record can be found of any such turtle having been caught before, though the usual fishermen's stories of "the one that got away" would perhaps make thes one seem small.

The turtle was shipped to Montreal by the D. Hatton Co., and was sold before arrival, to the Stanford Market, a retail store on St. Catherine St., which is always on the lookout for original window advertising. The photo here shown is of their window.

How Window Was Arranged.

A little description of the window itself would not be out of place here, as it is certainly a credit to the store, even without the originality of its centre being taken into consideration.

The fish, as shown in front are, strap bass, butter fish, and flounders, then the turtle, flanked by halibut. Whitefish, dore, fresh haddock, salmon trout, and finnan haddies occupy the rest of the sides and back in the order named. Prawns, scallops, and mussels are used ornamentally throughout.

As a little indication of the value of this display, Mr. Stanford said they had hardly been able to wait on the customers since its advent, though the staff is large and competent. He estimated that it had made, temporarily at least, 50 per cent. increase in their trade.

Such displays soon pay for themselves, particularly in this case, where there is fully 600 lbs of salable turtle flesh, besides a valuable shell.

WHEN YOU HAVE MADE A BAD INVESTMENT.

One of the hardest things a business man is called upon to do is to accept a great loss when he has made a mistake without trying to get his money back by the same means that he lost it. He says to himself: "Well, I am going to keep that thing up long enough to get my money back, and then I'll quit." But, as a rule, it is a mistake to continue in a thing which your judgment condemns.

When you are convinced that you have made a mistake, that you have entered into some business relationship or have gone into something which you should have kpet out of, cut it off as quickly as possible.

Many a man has made the fatal mistake of continuing in a bad venture, trying to get his money back. Most business men find that when they make a mistake, no matter how great the loss or how unfortunate, the best thing to do is to apply the heroic treatment, amputate the diseased limb, not try to palliate the symptoms with medicine.

A New York business man told me that he made an investment outside of his own business a few years ago, and that it did not turn out well, but that he was so determined not to lose any money, and to make it win, although it was a business which he knew practically nothing of, that he kept putting in more and more until he found that he had over two million dollars in the venture. He had made his money in his own business, which he knew all about, and after he found he had made a mistake in the new venture, when people laughed at him for his failure, his pride was touched, and he determined to show them that he could win out even in a business which was foreign to his training.

He said that his experience had taught him two lessons; to keep out of things which he knew nothing about; and when he found he had made a mistake, no matter how great the loss, to take his medicine and quit immediately. — Success Magazine.

SALESMANSHIP A SCIENCE.

The attention of readers is directed to the first article in the reading columns of this issue, entitled "Making Successful Salesmen of your Employes." It deals with what is now practically everywhere considered a recognized fact—that retail salesmen are not mechanical in their actions, but scientific.

One occasionally hears it mentioned that grocers do not require education in salesmanship, that they are merely machines handling goods from the shelf to the customers and placing the money in the till. Successful grocers, however, know that such a merchant wouldn't last very long. This mode of selling is ancient, if it ever did exist. Salesmanship in the store is a science, as the author of the above mentioned article clearly shows, particularly in the case where a customer's attitude is opposing.

Buying and selling are by no means mechanical; they must be worked out on a scientific basis and then, and then only, will the retailer carry on a business that will be satisfactory to him and to his customers.

ENFORCEMENT POSTPONED.

As a result of the conference which took place last week between the deputation opposing the passing of the Extra-Provincial Corporations Act, in Manitoba, and four members of the provincial cabinet, the brokers were assured that the act would not go into effect on November 1 next, as was intended it should.

The matter was not discussed at any length until the members of the Government were quite willing to concede to the request of the deputation to have the date of the enforcement postponed until satisfactory alterations have been made. The four arguments presented by the brokers against the Act, which were published in The Canadian Grocer of October 8, appealed to the ministers, and the necessity for a delay in the enforcement, as well as a change in the reading was quite evident to them. The four organizations composing the delegation were: The Board of Trade, the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, the Manufacturers' Association, and the Manufacturers' Agents of Winnipeg. The personnel of the delegation included Fred Drewry, John Persse, C. N. Bell, David Phillip, Mr. Fisher (president of the grain exchange), W. B. Gordon, E. H. Visset, R. H. Bryce, and Mr. Hoskin, solicitor.

The members of the Government who met the deputation were Premier R. P. Roblin, Hon. Robt. Rogers, Hon. Colin H. Campbell, and J. H. Howden, provincial secretary.

CHRISTMAS ARRANGEMENTS.

Early preparation for the Christmas holiday season would lessen the strain of the busy weeks. Buy early and try to sell before the rush.

Ample provision should be made for the safe-keeping of novelties bought in advance. Special arrangements must also be made for prompt delivery of goods.

Arrangements for easy communication with the stock-room are advisable. Keep track of stock so that time will not be lost in reordering needed articles.

It is important that, in holiday decorations every precaution should be taken against fire.

As you plan your buying so have your salesmen follow a definite plan in selling the holiday stock. It is a good plan sometimes to reward them for good work.

Have a series of holiday advertisements prepared in advance in skeleton form. Also have a schedule drawn up showing what goods should be displayed each week until Christmas. Then receive suggestions as to how the displays should be arranged—a pencil sketch giving an outline to follow. The advertising should usually deal with the goods shown in the window.

Christmas selling should commence not later than December 1, and from then till Christmas Eve the store staff should be prepared to serve every customer without delay.

Special effort should be made to interest the women and children. Secure their trade and the fathers and brothers will follow the lead.

Decorate the store interior and do what you can to give everything a holiday aspect. It helps in the selling.

GET RID OF THE OLD STOCK

On another page of this issue an item appears from a Halifax correspondent to the effect that a grocer there has difficulty in getting his salesmen to look after stock more carefully. He declares that they neglect to sell off the last of the old stocks before the first of the new and he frequently finds that this lack of judgment causes him the loss of good customers.

There can be no doubt that it does. Stale goods are not relished by anybody when he can purchase the fresh for the same money. Stocks therefore need to be carefully watched. It is a rather simple matter when a stock of new goods arrive—those that deteriorate with age—to arrange them in such a position on the shelves or in the bins that the remainders of old stocks are first disposed of. Biscuits, cereals, breakfast foods and confectionery might be particularly mentioned. When fresh they are relished by any person who cares for them, but if they are allowed to remain in the store for months, unless extra care is exercised, they lose their crispness and freshness. An old customer who is sold a stale breakfast food is apt to look elsewhere for her next supply.

It is quite evident therefore that it is a mistake to sell stale goods. The Halifax grocer knows that, but he has difficulty in educating his salesmen to pay strict attention to it. A good method to bring about this education would be to watch these salesmen as they stock the new goods on the shelves. See that they get the old tea and biscuits, etc., out to the front. Occasionally help them yourself and by your example and a plain explanation, teach them why the old goods should precede the new. You will find that the trouble you take will be little compared with the returns in dollars and cents that you will receive every year.

Good printing should cost no more than poor printing. When you pay the printer a fair price for his work, see that he gives you the kind of a job you are entitled to. Get posted, so that you will know what is wanted along that line.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Firm.
Canned Lobsters—Scarce.
Tea—None on market.
Coffee—High in primary market.

Montreal, Oct. 28, 1909.

Sugar seems to be very firm at present prices, and may, in fact, go higher, owing to the rise in raw sugars. Coffee primary market shows decided strength, particularly in Rio and Santos. This is largely owing to the short crop from these sections.

Later reports regarding damage done to dried fruits by the Quebec fire show that only a small section of the Bellona's cargo was left in Quebec and only a part of that was destroyed.

Patras currants are low at present, while other lines, peaches, apricots, prunes and pears are high in the primary markets.

Generally speaking nuts are high, though some lines show it more than others, Sicily filberts and shelled almonds (Valencias) being highest proportionately. Pecans are expected to go higher in the near future, owing to a short crop.

Nutmegs are due for an advance. In the primary market they are already 2c higher.

Generally speaking the market has an upward tendency, and many lines are expected to show this in the near future. Business is good and is improving daily.

SUGAR — Latest advices show all lines of raw sugars are advancing, due in large measure to the short crop in Europe. It is estimated that this will only amount to about 5,500,000 tons for the whole of the continent.

Local conditions are the same, with no immediate prospect of a change.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES—The demand for molasses is very good. For corn syrup, it is steadily slackening. This is due to the fact that people are not taking it up as it deserves to be. It is a good staple article and should have a larger sale. Indications point to no immediate revival.

TEA — The local market is quiet though firm at present prices. No immediate changes are expected.

"There was a hardening tendency in the tea market throughout September, owing largely to the conviction that for some months, at least, supplies would not prove excessive. Reports from India still speak of a shortage in production, more especially in some of the districts producing common kinds, although shipments, owing possibly to greater expedition in forwarding the tea from the gardens, do not yet show the deficiency. There is also the usual shrinkage at this time of year in supplies from Ceylon, and these conditions were largely responsible for the ½d per lb. advance in prices which took place. The deliveries seem to indicate that there is no large element of speculation involved, and as exports have increased notwithstanding the advance in price here, it shows that the demand has been general. As to future supplies, the matter hinges very much on the production in India during the next two months. Information received from Calcutta points to some little recovery of the previously reported shortage, but it is apparent that in a product so dependent on weather conditions as tea, no forecasting of the outturn can be absolutely relied on. The latest reports put the shortage at about 4½ million lbs., but the quantity actually shipped to London at the end of September was 87½ millions lbs., against 86½ millions at the same date last year. Against this it must not be overlooked that since the present season opened on 1st June, the exports from London of Indian tea have exceeded the same period of 1908 by 1½ million lbs., which will to that further extent diminish the prospective total for the season. There is an increase in the supply from Ceylon, but against this there is rather less arriving from China, and stocks in the U.K. are at present 7¾ million lbs. lower than they were a year ago. Imports are not likely to prove excessive for some time to come, and conditions appear very healthy from the point of view of the tea producing companies."

COFFEE — Coffees, particularly Rio and Santos, are rising in the primary markets, but as yet no local effect has been noticed. New York latest advices are, that owing to a short crop in the two lines above mentioned, local prices will be advanced in the near future. The total Santos yield is only estimated at 8,000,000 bags. The old crop Santos now available is only trifling and roasters will be forced to supply themselves soon. The general consumption of coffee seems to be increasing largely, which is another factor in future prices.

DRIED FRUITS—Patras currants are down to bed-rock prices. Peaches, apricots, prunes and pears are all on a higher basis in the primary markets, and will likely go higher.

The situation in California raisins is a rather peculiar one. The new crop is large. The carry-over stock from last year is also large. To straighten out this serious condition of affairs, the $1,000,000 combine of California growers, announced in last week's Grocer has been organized.

SPICES—The market continues firm, with an increase of two cents in nutmegs in the primary market. As yet this has not affected local conditions, but it will, should the advance go on. ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Market firm.

Canned Lobsters—Hard to obtain.

Canned Peas—Shortage with high prices.

Nuts—Market advancing.

Beans—Lower than last year.

Toronto, October 28, 1909.

The wholesale trade is active, which is sure evidence that the retailers are turning over their goods and are receiving liberally from the rich harvest of this summer's magnificent crops. If the immense revenue of our abundant crops will be wisely distributed through the natural channels of trade, instead of pouring it into the coffers of institutions that will not give the best returns, then all parts of the country will derive their equal shares. This will bring prosperity to every corner of our entire Dominion.

It behooves all retail merchants to make every possible effort to give a service so good and complete that people will spend their money through their local stores and help to build up the towns, and increase the value of the properties all over our country. That the people are doing this to a large extent is shown by the fact of the large trade which is going through the regular wholesale houses.

The raw sugar market has advanced again during the week and the refined situation is firm.

Canned lobsters are getting scarcer and prices are apt to advance. Canned peas are in a somewhat similar position and are difficult to get from first hands.

The nut market is strong in most cases due to inferior crops. This refers particularly to shelled almonds and walnuts and pecans.

SUGAR—The sugar market is still firm; it is doubtful what the future will bring forth. Raw beet sugar has advanced on the European markets due to the reports from all quarters that the roots now being pulled are showing a deficiency in percentage of sugar. The advance, too, it is claimed, is partly due to speculative interests and an apparent shortage. Cane raws have advanced in sympathy, but refined remains the same as last quoted. Buyers are, however, showing more interest in sugars for prompt delivery. As sugar is one of the markets that changes often with no apparent reason it is hard to say what will happen next.

DRIED FRUITS—Nearly all varieties of dried fruits are now on the market. Currants and raisins are below the average quality and are about one cent cheaper. Prunes are just arriving with a large percentage of smaller sizes. The quality is good but also lower than last year's fruit. The market is stronger than it recently was. Apricots are dearer and are firm at 15½c for choice and 17 for fancy. Orange peel took a sudden upward turn and is now quoted 1c higher. Hallowe'en dates are 1c a pound lower. The cause of currants being so low now is attributed to the fact that the usual shipments have not been sent to the British markets. Excessive rains affected the quality.

NUTS—Old nuts are moving slowly, but retailers should be careful and not load up before the new stock is available. These will arrive in three or four weeks, but some houses are taking orders to arrive. As the tendency is upward perhaps orders for future delivery will be good buying. Spanish shelled almonds are higher on the primary market than they have been for years. Shelled walnuts hold a strong position and it is impossible almost to get quotations that will last. Shipments are bringing 2½ cents per pound more than last year. The weather has been against the crops. The pecan crop is short in Louisiana and Texas, but as few are sold in Canada on account of the duty of 3 cents per pound, the market is not much affected here. Of course, if the crop fails in those two States, no other pecans can be got.

EVAPORATED APPLES — Although prices have not changed since last week, it may be said that the market is strong and prices may still go higher. Manufacturers are very independent and want the full limit or they will not sell. Last year at this time they were 1½ to 2 cents a pound lower. The export demand is large and New York exporters are bomming prices.

BEANS—Beans are coming in freely and are easier, but without any noticeable change in their value. They are from 15 to 20 cents per bushel cheaper than last year at this time.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—The demand is good in small lots. This is due to purchasers filling in what is needed to make up their full requirements. Deliveries from the canners are now coming in freely from past orders. There is a good demand for lobsters and supplies are already running short with no more in sight.

TORONTO.—The time to buy canned lobsters is apparently at hand. The pack has been short on account of the smallness of the catch due to heavy storms in the fishing season, and from all reports there are few in first hands. The situation is just the reverse of a year ago when canned lobsters were plentiful. It was thought that such would be the case again, but it is not. Export demand for lobsters is very heavy.

It is not likely there will be any weakening in the sockeye salmon market. While the run of salmon was good, it came all at once and prevented factories from packing what they had anticipated. For instance they were prepared to pack 1,000,000 cases on the Fraser River, while in reality only about 400,000 were put up. English buyers have been buying up everything in sight on account of the excellent quality this year. The English market always takes the best.

The fact that there was a short pack of peas in already widely known. "We simply can't get any," remarked one jobber, while another stated that he would have to pay $1 a dozen if he were to buy from first hands to-day. This situation is much different from the one at the time of the opening prices when peas were offered to the retailer at 65 cents.

Tomatoes are strong and may go up—it will not surprise brokers if they do. There seems to be plenty of corn in sight but there is no indication that prices will weaken. Beans were a fairly good crop and the pack was quite large.

Fruits do not show any particular tendency. Strawberries have, of course, gone up considerably since opening prices.

ST. JOHN MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., October 27, 1909.

Grocers both wholesale and retail report that the past month or two have shown a marked increase over the same months last year. Just at present the wholesalers are pretty busy, large shipments being made to upriver points and along the coast to people desirous of laying in supplies before the close of navigation.

Farmers in Carleton county and adjoining counties are losing heavily on potatoes this year. Owing to the wet weather large quantities of the tubers rotted and while they have been sorted in some cases, two or three times already, it may be necessary to go over them again before they are fit for market. The price at Hartland which is in the heart of the potato country has been as low as 65 cents a barrel.

There have been few changes in the markets this week. The quotations are:

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Corrected by Telegraph.)

Advances—All syrups, peas, English apricot, raspberry jams, evaporated apples.

Firmer—Canned tomatoes, prunes, barley.

Weaker—3-lb picker beans.

Withdrawals—Canned peas.

Winnipeg, October 31, 1909.

The output is heavy in canned goods but with this exception the demand is slightly quieter. Markets on the whole are firmer and some important advances have been reported. Wholesalers are ordering heavily from manufacturers at present prior to the close of navigation. The difference between lake and rail shipments is considerable at this point. It is difficult to know just the quantity retailers desire to stock up for winter, in certain commodities such as salt which comes by the lake route. The consumption is always heavy, but the storage in Winnipeg is expensive and an attempt is always made to move the orders out as soon as possible.

Valencia raisins, jams and extracts are moving slowly for this season. It is expected that trade will revive in these lines in time for Xmas business.

Many merchants are finding time to visit the wholesale houses just now and they are leaving some handsome orders. Xmas goods as well as the general winter stocks are being ordered freely by the visitors.

SUGAR—The recent reduced price has become firmer and it may not be long before sugar goes up again. The trade has been excellent and it is to be regretted that there is not more profit in this commodity for the retailer.

BUTTER—No. 1 dairy is 24c and No. 2 is firm at 20 cents per pound. The creamery stands at 27 and the general consumption is heavy.

VANCOUVER MARKETS.

Vancouver, October 27, 1909.

Shipments of dog salmon are steadily arriving from the northern part of the province. Japanese put this fish up, and it is shipped to Japan, where the consumption is large. Last year, a steamer came from Japan for a special cargo.

At the last meeting of the Board of Trade of Vernon, B. C., a letter was received from R. Simpson, wholesale grocer of Guelph, asking concerning an opening for a wholesale grocery in that city.

The fertility of the Okanagan in growing potatoes is shown by the display in the window of DeHart & Harvey at Kelowna. The exhibit comprises 12 potatoes with a total weight of 50 pounds. They are clean fine specimens, absolutely free of knobs or second growth excrescences, which often give so-called large potatoes their weight.

CALGARY MARKETS.

Calgary, October 27, 1909.

Never before has there been such a plentiful supply of Ontario grapes in this city and at a price which seems reasonable to consumers, viz., 35 to 40c per basket retail. Eastern apples are beginning to arrive in large quantities. Prices for prime winter stock will be high and will likely retail at around $6 per barrel. In dried fruits which are largely consumed in the west, California peaches and apricots are in active demand and prices are advancing sharply.

It is estimated that very large quantities of evaporated fruits will be required during the coming winter and following spring. As long as the weather remains open, work on railway construction will be carried on, and as there are thousands of men employed at the present time in Alberta, the consumption of dried fruits is heavy. The first shipment of Valencia raisins arrived early in the month, the quality being fine. New Smyrna Sultanas are in, also layer and natural figs. A car of cold storage walnuts and Brazils was received by the dealers last week. A few cars of eastern eggs have arrived, the local supply being quite inadequate to meet requirements. Fresh candled eastern are worth to the retailer $9.25 per case of 30 dozen. Alberta creamery butter notwithstanding the increased output is none too plentiful, the retail price is 30 to 35c per lb. Both wholesale and retail trade is good, merchants all look forward to a very busy season.

The Manufacture of Potato Starch in Prince Edward Island—Has Market Among the Cotton Mills—Sometimes This Starch is Reduced to a Flour for Confectionery Purposes.

By D. Williams.

Prince Edward Island is preeminently an agricultural country and is well named The Garden of the Gulf. Its productive and well cultivated farms remind one of southern Quebec and Ontario. There are not many manufacturindustries on the Island except such as grow out of the products of the farms. Quite a number of cheese and butter factories produce excellent articles in their respective lines.

There is one manufacturing industry, however, which in Canada is peculiar to the Island, that is the manufacture of potato starch, there being no less than six large concerns actively engaged in its production. The process of manufacturing this article, although comparatively simple, is quite interesting. The raw material, that is the potatoes, immediately after being dug are loaded into one-horse carts, so largely used in P.E.I. and hauled direct to the factory, where, after being weighed, are dumped into the receiver. They are then run down a chute to a large washing machine where they are scoured in pure running water. After being thoroughly washed by an ingeniously constructed machine they are dumped into the grinder. This consists of huge iron colanders with a surface which reduces the potatoes to a fine pulp. This in turn drops out to a reciprocating sieve upon which water is constantly showered by a sprinkler. This separates the crude starch from the potato fibre, the former falling through the fine meshes of the sieve into a constant stream of clean water and is carried to huge tanks where the product of the day's run is allowed to stand and settle until the following morning. The rough fibre or waste material of the potato falls over the end of the sieve and is carried away by a stream of flowing water. No profitable use has so far been found for its disposal but the manufacture of alcohol for industrial purposes is being seriously considered by some of the manufacturers.

When the crude starch and water is run into the tanks a heavy froth or scum arises on the surface. This is carefully skimmed off during the night and in the morning after the starchy matter has settled to the bottom of the tanks the water is drawn off. The crude starch is then broken up and again dissolved in pure water when it is pumped to another tank and again allowed to settle and the water drawn off.

The starch is then pure and presents a beautiful, white, thick, paste-like appearance. From this tank it is removed to the dryer, a large apartment heated by steam. After being thoroughly dried, it is broken up and driven through sieve-like lattice work, until it reaches the packing room below where it is thoroughly pulverized. The finished product is now packed in 200-lb. bags and is ready for shipment. This starch finds a market among the large cotton mills.

For Confectionery Purposes.

Some of the mills put a part of their product through a further process reducing it to a flour, when it is sold for confectionery purposes. The proprietors of one of the mills are seriously considering the proposition to manufacture a part of their product into glucose and considering the high price of corn, from which this article is made, they think it ought to be a profitable venture. To give an idea of the quantity of potatoes used in this industry, each of the mills will grind about 18 or 19 hundred bushels per day running about six weeks during the season. Each bushel of potatoes will produce from 8 to 9 pounds of starch.

The price paid at the factory for the raw material is about 28c per cwt., taken direct from the field. Very little dirt adheres to the potatoes, as the soil in which they are grown is a fine dry loam. The mills in operation are owned or managed by the following parties: Morell Starch Factory, owned by H. D. McEwan and R. N. Cox, H. D. McEwan, manager; St. Peters Starch Co., W. A. Weeks, Charlottetown, manager; Prowse & Sons, Murray Harbor; J. A. Farquis, Charlottetown, Westville; C. E. Full, Charlottetown, Hunter River.

VALUE OF GOOD COPY

Personally, I believe "ads." in trade papers should be made so attractive, so interesting in some way that the merchant as he glances through the trade journal will stop and see what you have to say. The simple announcement that you are in business is not enough. I don't care how prominent a firm is, they should not get the idea they are so big that all they need to do is to reproduce their name on a page in a trade journal and say nothing more. They should do something to make the merchant curious; in fact, somewhat anxious to meet the travelling man you are sending out to represent you.

Packers Having Difficulty in Filling Orders

Supply of Hogs Short—Prospects for Higher Cheese Prices Doubtful—Advance in Compound Lards.

The supply of hogs is still below the mark, and packers are looking for more to come in. With no stock in hand, they often find difficulty in filling their orders. The demand for cured meats is brisk and sharp, and business is active. Bacon in England is firm, Canadian bacon bringing from 66 to 70 shillings.

Outside of the local trade the butter market is dull, with apparently no outlet to leave a margin to dealers.

With the low price of cheese it is quite likely that cheese factories will close early this fall, which will turn more milk to be made into butter. From this stand of view and from the fact that the bulk of our summer's make is still held in cold storage, the prospects for higher prices are very doubtful.

The early makes of Australian and New Zealand butters, are already on the way to England, and if our butter will not move soon, chances are that the demand we expect for it will not materialize. With the reduced duty on cream going to the States, a large quantity finds sale in the United States market, and if the prices keep up there, we might also find that market the best we can do with our butter.

PROVISIONS—The hog receipts have fallen off during the last two weeks, which means that the farmers look for more money. Monday being a holiday may have something to do with this week's supply, and next week may make up for it again. The demand for cured meats is keeping up, and as there is no old stock to fall back to, it takes all the packers can do to secure enough to keep their customers supplied. Eggs—Eggs are higher than they ever were in Toronto at this time of the year. Strictly new laid eggs are very scarce, and sell easily at 35c per dozen. This will, however, not determine that eggs will necessarily be high all winter. Rather cold weather set in suddenly, which checked the production of eggs, and made it necessary for the hens to get out a new program for the winter. The prices are now at a good paying figure, which will induce farmers to take special care of their flocks, and get them going again earlier than other years, and unless the weather should turn out extremely cold, which also can be overcome to a large extent by the comfortable homes they have provided for them, fresh laid eggs might start to come in earlier, and in larger quantities than in former years. There is a good active demand for storage eggs from the Northwest.

POULTRY—Merchants throughout the country who buy poultry should insist upon the farmers preparing them better for the market, and unless improvement is made from that end, birds coming to the market which are too badly fed for human food must be confiscated by the inspector. Some turkeys came in for Thanksgiving, which would indicate that they, at least, had not much to feel thankful for. They were mere skeletons, and nothing but skin and bones. To overcome this carelessness on the part of the farmer, the dealers in the city are now trying to buy poultry as much as possible alive, and feed and prepare them here. This is done now by a good many with good and profitable results.

FOWL ROUGHLY HANDLED.

"Reader" Calls Attention to What He Considers Inhuman Treatment of Live Fowl Sent into Cities.

Toronto, Oct. 26, 1909.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—As a reader of your paper will you permit me to make a plea from the humanitarian standpoint, for the better care of fowl sent to and offered on the Toronto market (and I dare say the conditions prevailing here may also be met with in the large cities elsewhere)? My work takes me, very often, past the commission houses on Front Street as well as through the market itself, and I have often expressed a word of pity for the poor fowl pent up in undersized boxes and exposed under a glaring sun, unclean and illy fed for two days at a time. Often I have thought what a lesson might be taught the culprits of this practice if they could be penned up in similar boxes and left exposed, starving during sun and rain, even for one day.

Now I do not mean to say the commission men are entirely to blame for this condition; I rather believe the farmer must bear the brunt. First the fowl are starved for nearly 48 hours before being sent to market; they are packed in and cooped up in small crates, not high enough for the birds to crane their necks; carted off to the station, where rough young fellows toss them into the cars, out again and off to the commission houses, where they are exposed in many cases for two days before being sold.

Now this is not as it should be. The merciful man is merciful not only to his own beast, but he should be a little bit careful of the animal lives left in his care. It is true that this year has seen some improvement in the size of the crates sent in by some farmers, and even a number of the commission houses now own crates of special make, which they loan farmers for the sending in of their fowl. The express companies, too, after the complaints of a year ago, handle the boxes with less carelessness; but there is plenty of room for improvement yet for there must surely be some deterioration in the present methods; and it is to be hoped that the improvement will commence right away.

A READER.

STOCKING POOR CHEESE.

A Montreal, wholesaler has called attention to the fact that Canadians are not using nearly the proportion of good cheese that England and the United States do. The reason he assigned was that the Canadian grocers do not, as a general rule, stock the best grades, thus prejudicing the customers against all cheese. There is plenty of good cheese to be had in this country, he says, and more care should be taken in cheese selection by the retailer. If this were done he prophesied we would consume double the cheese we now do.

"UNFAIR BURDEN ON THE FARMER."

Editor Canadian Grocer,—Under the above heading Farm and Dairy, an agricultural paper, makes a labored effort to bring to light the hidden reasons "why the boys and girls, in spite of all that has been said and written leave the farms and go to the cities."

While the writer of the article recognizes many other efforts valuable, yet according to his idea, they are only "scratching the surface." He ventures to go away down to the root and finds that the whole trouble is in our system of taxation, and the remedy is to be found in single tax. He further states that "it is the farmers' productive labor which creates the cities; property holders in the cities reap a certain portion of benefit from the efforts of the farmers, to which they are not entitled."

In this he is perfectly correct, but evidently he did not dig deep enough to get at the root. Taxation is not the trouble at all. Because the land in cities is very valuable, he would make owners there bear a greater portion of the farmer's taxes, so that the farmers would still have more money to make the city property still more valuable. It is not the land in itself that becomes valuable, but the particular location where too many people flock to do their business.

It is surprising to see an editorial article trying to solve a difficulty, in a paper that contains an advertisement asking people to support the mail-order institution which is causing the trouble of which he is complaining.

Boys and girls are not leaving the farms so much on account of the attractiveness of city life, as they are on account of the loneliness of the country. Let the farmers spend the money which goes to the mail-order stores in their own towns where goods can be bought in stores that stand on cheap land but which could be made more valuable and upon which the proprietors would gladly pay taxes in proportion as they are needed for the service of the farmers.

The young people will not feel satisfied to stay on the farms if the towns are allowed to go down for want of support. Let all agricultural influence be kept in motion, but they will never make farm life attractive until they try to cultivate a friendly and just feeling with the business people of their respective towns. Suppose the wealth of the most valuable acres of land in Toronto was spread over the country towns, which would be the case if the people would deal in the country towns. Would that not at once bring back to the different municipalities the taxes to which the large cities, as Farm and Dairy claims, they are not entitled. Unless the farming community will realize the importance, value, and convenience of our towns sufficiently to keep them thriving, through their reasonable support, the country will suffer at the expense of a few gigantic concerns which are neither a necessity nor a convenience, but an immense drain on the country.

Through incessant advertising, without anything having been done to counteract its influence, the trade of the country has been turned into a channel, the effects of which are injurious to the country. What a deplorable state of affairs it is to think that the prosperity, convenience, health and happiness of a young country are being undermined, and instead of people living on the land, and in towns are drifting into the many unwholesome conditions of city life. Let the farmers support their own towns, and not spend their money in making millionaires and land worth $3,400,000 an acre, and the taxes will right themselves

ANTI-CATALOGUE HOUSE.

Toronto, October 27, 1909.

AN OLD MUSKOKA STORE.

In 1860 the District of Muskoka was opened up for settlement, and the rush for the north began just like the rush for the great west some years ago, and of late years to the silver country in Northern Ontario. But the settlers encountered many hardships in those early days, namely, the thickly wooded country, the thousands of wolves and jackals and the prowling bear. Also they found a mountainous and rocky district that made the bravest shudder and weaken at the thoughts of hauling or packing food stuffs to keep life in the family.

The John Sandfield Macdonald administration undertook the almost impossible task of building a road through the wilds of Muskoka.

The photograph shows an old store built in those days, its location being at South Falls, three miles south of the present town of Bracebridge.

The store was built in the spring of sixty-three after the completion of the road by Macdonald, who saw in the future of South Falls a rising city; and for a while his dreams looked true. Old settlers say he carried the greatest stock in the country—groceries, dry-goods, boots and shoes, hardware, patent medicines—in fact everything from a boot-lace to a post-hole. Settlers from miles around gathered at the store day by day, not only to buy, but to discuss the rulers of the country. Trade was good, the store was large, and money was plenty, so in '65 a stock of whiskey was added and it became a hotel, store and post-office, but in '68 "old Mack" saw the town of Bracebridge looming up and his dreams being shattered, he sold to the Cameron family and went north. The Camerons soon got rid of the stock of merchandise, but carried on the hotel and post-office till '83 when they gave the hotel up only retaining the post-office, which they still have at the time of writing. By the way a picture of Alex. Cameron is seen in the photograph of the store where he has lived for over forty years.

WHY IMPORT BISCUITS?

It isn't a question of the Quality of imported Fancy Biscuits at all. We know that British manufacturers have reduced baking to an exact science—a fine art. But we also know that our Acorns, Wafer Rolls, Dominoes, La Fetes, Orange Wafers, Coffee Wafers, Philopenas, etc., are the best made in Canada. We also know that all will compare favorably with any imported line—however high the Quality. Christie's fancy biscuits are superior to any baked on this continent, and they are equal in Quality, Purity and Nutriment to any fancy biscuits baked anywhere. Besides—it's a matter of dollars and cents to YOU. You can get Christie's biscuits when you want them. Think it over before placing your Christmas orders.

Fall Wheat Flour Advances, Manitobas Unchanged

Winter Wheat Prices High— Good Export Demand for Flour —An Advance in Cereals Anticipated by Some on Account of High Prices of Wheat and Oats.

The bearish features in the wheat situation are becoming more and more pronounced, and in spite of the hanging on for higher prices, the farmers must realize, that after all, supply and demand have some influence on the market. The enormous crop from day to day as the threshing and marketing progresses, shows remarkable increases over estimates, and it does not look as if holding on on the part of the farmer is a wise thing to do. It seems, however, that winter wheat in Ontario has a value of its own, and is required for certain lines of goods, and prices are paid accordingly. This week winter wheat is up to $1.08 a bushel and fall wheat flour has gone up 20c a barrel, while Manitoba flour remains unchanged.

Oats are firm with an upward feeling. The demand for all kinds of cereals is active at full prices, with a likelihood of an advance.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—There is a good export demand for flour. Wheat prices have been steadily advancing until flour is too cheap at present quotations of wheat.

Ontario farmers are holding back their wheat, which keeps the millers from offering flour freely.

The quality of the new Manitoba flour looks exceptionally good, though it has not yet been thoroughly tried out. The samples have good color, and with a little age, should be better than last year's.

CONNECTION BETWEEN ARTICLES IN SELLING.

So many times a customer buys such an article as flour. Here is where the wise clerk suggests that they have some of the finest yeast, or baking powder, that can be purchased. This is only a sample instance. Nearly every purchase suggests some other which should naturally go with it. Study the relations between articles in practical use and it will benefit both the customer and the store.

TRADE NOTES.

Ald. E. J. Fader, of New Westminster, B.C., has purchased the grocery store in that city owned by C. B. Deans.

W. W. Craig, who has been in the general mercantile business at Boundary Falls for the past 7 years, has opened in Greenwood, B.C.

John G. Murdock, a former Chatham, Ont., citizen, but who has for the past 18 years been located in the west, has secured the grocery store in Chatham where Frank Snook formerly carried on business, and will shortly open a well stocked grocery store and meat shop.

An important business transfer took place in the grocery trade last week in Chatham, Ont., whereby Geo. Bartlett secured sole control of the King Edward Grocery, which he has for the past five years conducted in partnership with Harry S. Northwood. Mr. Northwood's retirement is necessitated by ill health, and he will leave shortly to visit his brothers at Wagon Mound, New Mexico. Geo. Bartlett, who, is now sole proprietor, has climbed the business ladder from the lowest rung. His first grocery experience was obtained as delivery boy for O. M. Aubin & Co., who formerly conducted business on St. Clair St., in J. W. Dyer's present stand. Later, and until he entered into partnership with Mr. Northwood, he was traveler for the Edward Adams Co. of London.

Compelling the Call-again

In our beloved Canadian Metropolis, Brother Grocer, the artful Street Railway exact Five Per.

But, if you invest a "quarter," you collar an extra ticket: you get six instead of five.

If, however, you spread yourself and "blow in" one whole dollar of the Hard-earned, you become the proud possessor of Five Free Fares. Surely, this is Unwonted Generosity, smacking of the "free, gratis for nothing"!

Well, hardly.

It is merely Good Business—it is to insure the "return of the Customer."

To make sure of that self-same dollar.

And to make sure of it they are willing to sacrifice 25 per cent.

* * * *

Some members of the retailing fraternity hold the five-center so close to the eye that they fail to see the dollar in the offing.

To "bank" on the Come-again, Brother Grocer, are you willing to pay the price?

To sacrifice just a little immediate profit to-day for the sake of a bigger to-morrow?

To absorb out of your permanent profits the trivial difference between the "just as good" and the "has made good"?

The difference between "near good" flour and FIVE ROSES.

* * * *

Would it help some, Brother Grocer, to know that this Deceptive Difference in first cost is fast swallowed up in lost sales and shelf-staying proclivities.

That instead of continued profit on "near-good" flour, you are in fact a loser on "Call-again" sales which the price of Satisfaction would have engendered.

FIVE ROSES, Brother Grocer, has never been surpassed.

Its quality is the ideal which so-called "best" brands are forever striving to attain.

Its name is the most copied and travestied of any flour brand in Canada (names on request.)

That so many, besides the FIVE ROSES legitimate retailers, are anxious to cash in on its reputation proves its Popularity with the housewife.

* * * *

And now, Brother Grocer, why should YOU take the minimum profit when the maxium profit is yours for the taking?

Don't you want to handle a Swift Seller and Repeater?

Wouldn't you like to sell FIVE ROSES?

Kingston Grocer gives Advice on Store Management

Contrasts the Careless Merchant With the One Who is Up-to-date in His Methods—Advocates Labor Saving Devices—Advantages of Keeping Good Salesmen and Delivery-men.

Editor Canadian Grocer.—Kingston merchants are paying more attention lately to store decoration and window dressing and a large percentage of the credit is due I think to the untiring efforts of The Canadian Grocer which devotes a lot of space urging its subscribers to clean up and fix up and adopt modern methods in harmony with the present age and generation.

I tell you it is a great object lesson to jump up, put on your hat and take a run around and see the other fellows and note the different ideas in window dressing and store architecture. Some paint the outside woodwork green, others orange, brown, white, etc. Green stain grained is the latest. Some pile goods up inside and outside so that you can hardly see the store or fixtures. Others have well-dressed windows and the interior looks like the day after exhibition—old barrels, boxes, stepladders, trucks and hammers in every direction.

Then as a contrast you see the neat, tidy grocery—everything clean, floor oiled, goods piled up tastily, cases shining and full of dainty things piled up temptingly. You can see clean counters, brass scoops and scales glistening; samples of tea and sugar in glass or brass trays with neat tickets or red or blue price cards bearing the names of the goods, you see modern meat cutters, cheese cutters, electric coffee mills, silent salesman and many other labor and expense-saving devices. There are tidy clerks in clean white jackets or aprons waiting on customers. Do you question the fact that cleanliness and obliging clerks bring trade? I guess not.

I think a grocer should occasionally take a trip to Montreal, Toronto, or some other place in order to get some new ideas. He should keep his eyes open and take back something that will assist him in his business.

Keep good help, get salesmen who use their brains as well as their heads. Good delivery waggon drivers are not to be overlooked. They should be men with good appearance who take pride in cleaning their horses, waggons and harness and who have a pleasing manner towards customers. Impolite drivers do not help trade. Use a good ad. of some of your specialties on your paper bags. Some grocers use distinctive colored rolls of paper and others colored or printed bags and bill heads so that customers can say without seeing the name from where the goods came.

A good style of tea and coffee bag is a necessity in a store and adds to the sale of goods as well as egg carriers and clean delivery boxes and baskets. I would advise a dealer to adopt a certain color, and paint his delivery boxes the same. Some manufacturers put up their goods in fine delivery boxes and these come in handy.

Many are the varieties of signs which can be used with good results. We see them on all sides in various shapes and sizes. When signs become disfigured and an eye-sore to the section in which they are located, they should be replaced or at least torn down.

A nuisance to merchants, and in fact to most citizens, is the throwing around the counters, street-doors, sidewalks market-places, etc., of dodgers. If advertising is to be done, let it be done through newspapers or trade journals and not thrown all over the streets on dodgers which become a nuisance to most people.

A LIMESTONE CITY GROCER.
Kingston, Oct. 26, 1909.

LOBSTERS FIRMING UP.

Short Pack and Bare Foreign Markets Result in Advances Locally to the Extent of 10 per Cent., With a Steady Upward Trend Likely to Materialize.

Higher priced lobsters are going to be the rule until next spring, when the new catch is quoted. Prices asked to-day by holders of stock are higher by 10 per cent. than they were a year ago. To the grocer, half-pounds are costing in the neighborhood of $2.20, while one-pounds are selling at a figure around $4.55. Lower quotations than these are obtainable in some quarters, but the numerals indicate the much firmer feeling existing. Several reasons may be named for the marked strength now displayed in the lobster market. It will be recalled that when the fishing season was at its height severe storms were experienced on the south and west coasts of Nova Scotia, from which fishing grounds a great portion of Canada's supply comes.

These storms did untold damage to the fishing paraphernalia of the lobstermen, and it was impossible to replace destroyed traps and tackle in time to take advantage of the season, which closed so shortly afterwards. The result was that the catch did not measure up to those of previous years in volume, and the new season was begun with the packers working under the serious handicap of a shortage. Now, within the past few days, it is learned that the foreign market—always an important consideration in the determining of lobster values in Canada—is practically bare. This was the climax. Prices advanced materially, and further rises are anticipated, in view of the continued demand there will be from outside centres and the small holdings of Canadian packers, who are already short of numerous lines.

Stocks held in second hands are not large, and will last barely through the period which must elapse before 1910 lobsters are quoted. Lobsters represent a good investment at present.

Enormous Quantities of Apples Going to England

Great Demand for Them From Across the Atlantic—Good Time To Stock Potatoes—Peculiar Situation in the Lemon Market—Fish in Better Demand.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—The lemon situation is rather peculiar this week. In New York lemons are now selling at $5, while here they are $3. It is expected that a sympathetic movement of price will take place here very shortly in case no change takes place in the New York market. The cause seems to be a sudden increase of demand for this fruit. Speculation also may have something to do with it.

The early varieties of apples are about done and winter stock has not yet made its appearance in very large quantities.

Basket grapes are cheaper, particularly Concords and Niagaras.

FISH—More suitable weather has brightened the fish business considerably. Smoked and prepared fish are in much better demand and as supplies are not over plentiful, prices are likely to show the effect soon. Bulk and shell oysters, as usual, at this time of the year, are very much in demand, and prices are good. Receipts of green cod are rather light just now. Pickled herring are plentiful.

GREEN FRUITS.—The green fruit market is rapidly coming to the end of the season. A few baskets of peaches still make their appearance from day to day. Plums have entirely disappeared and pears occupy small space. Grapes and apples rule the market, and are in abundance. Grapes, especially, are very plentiful and sell as low as 10c a small basket and 20c a large one, and even at these low prices they are looking for buyers. Apples run from $1.50 to $4 a barrel, choice select Snows bringing the highest price. The best winter apples are not yet offered for local use. Shipments from Canada to England are very heavy. Last week the shipments totalled up to 94,047 barrels. It may be interesting to know that while we shipped this enormous quantity, the United States only shipped 19,013 barrels. Florida oranges are expected to arrive as well as Sicily lemons. Prices will likely be lower.

VEGETABLES — Potatoes arrive in liberal quantities and are sold in 5 and 10 bag lots to dealers at 60 to 65c a bag. If merchants have room to store them, it ought to be a good investment to put them in now before the extra cost of protecting them against frost has been added. Canteloupes are still coming in, but the quality cannot be recommended. Onions are held too high and in consequence large quantities are imported from the States, besides the special varieties from other countries. The city is, at present principally supplied with all kinds of vegetables from the gardeners in the vicinity of Toronto.

THOMAS MARTINDALE
A former Canadian, now a Millionaire Wholesale Grocer of Philadelphia

"Big capital, a fine reputation, dignity and past history stand for much in business life, but these adjuncts alone will not hold trade without advertising, against the modern, up-to-date concerns who use the potential force of publicity intelligently and persistently."—Thomas Martindale.

"Years ago when I was young and inexperienced in the trade there was only one brand of canned corn focused in the public eye, and that was 'Baker's,' and Baker's corn was then advertised and pushed to the limit. A couple of brands of tomatoes stood out ahead of the rest—the 'Beefsteak' and the 'Quinton.' Of canned peaches, 'Richardson & Robbins' was the most famous; of soap, 'B. T. Babbitt's.' My, but how I used to devour the literature and look at the pictures the Babbitt people used to send out about their soap! Rumford's baking powder was another trade winner, and 'White Rose' baking powder and 'Sea Foam' baking powder. And who doesn't remember the ads. picturing the benefits to be derived from the free use of Hostetter's bitters, of Plantation bitters, and of Helmbold's buchu?

"But now the very reading of some of these names is like listening to the forgotten strains of an old song which we sang when youth and suppleness made us light of foot and cheerful of mind; when everything was before us and we knew not what our future was to be.

"It is true that some, if not most of the articles enumerated, are still on the market, and no doubt they are as meritorious as of old, but the point is, they have not been kept to the front by the free use of printers' ink. Other manufacturers and packers and wholesale houses and commission houses have entered the field, and in a measure crowded the one-time household standbys to the rear.

"So it must go on. 'Youth must be served' at times, in business as in athletics. Big capital, a fine reputation, dignity and a past history stand for much in business life, but these adjuncts alone will not hold trade without advertising, against the modern, up-to-date concerns who use the potential force of publicity intelligently and persistently."—From an address delivered by Mr. Martindale at a banquet given by the Canadian Club, of London, Ont. His subject was "Advertising: Its Practice and Rewards."

We could add to Mr. Martindale's list the names of some Canadian products, once household words from coast to coast, whose makers relied on their "established position" to hold trade against progressive competitors, who grasped the immense possibilities of advertising and turned it to good account.

Next week's talk—Tom Murray, a Canadian, who has advertised himself into one of the best retail businesses in Chicago, tells how his purchases are influenced by trade paper advertising.

McCASKEY REGISTER SYSTEM

MADE IN CANADA

Coudersport, Pa., 1/25/09

Mr. C. R. Graybill (Salesman)
Dear Sir:

You told us that the register would help to collect our accounts, and I will tell you a little about it up till now.

The second day we used it a man owing us $63.87 came in and after getting one of the slips with his account on, said, "I want to pay my bill," I said, "pay it all?" and he said, "yes, and hereafter I want to pay every week," and his bill had not been settted in full before in five years.

The next evening a lady came in and paid a bill of nearly eight dollars that had been hanging fire for over two years.

Here is a litt'e note we got from a lady a few days ago. I will not give the name:

"Our account is so large that I am ashamed to see it on the bills and if my husband does not settle, I want you to get right after him." The next day we got a cheque; the amount was $136.92.

It is surely a crackerjack for credits. Two of our men have been sick with the mumps since you were here and the book-keeper has been doing up groceries instead of sitting at the desk, and we have got along alright.

(Signed) Harrison Gates.

The McCASKEY collects accounts. Let us tell you how.

We publish other trade papers and require representatives to push circulation.

If you show business-getting qualities, we can always offer you promotion. Consider the opportunity of further extending your business education, and adding to your income at the same time; because, to be successful in canvassing for trade papers, you must study and understand them; to study and understand them is to absorb practical information, and to increase your earning power, by getting a grasp of every day actual business happenings as they occur and are disposed of.

This work, while affording valuable experience in modern business methods, will substantially increase your income, as our commissions are liberal.

A Great Selling Team

¶ Buyers must be moved through several steps to be brought to the buying point.

¶ They must have their attention attracted to the article. They must have their interest in it awakened. They must be informed as to its nature, utility and merits. They must be convinced of its value. They must be moved to action to closing.

¶ Good salesmen and good trade-paper advertising make a great team to carry the buyer through these several stages to the buying point. Alone, the salesman is at a disadvantage.

Symposium of Opinions on Short Terms of Credit

What the Trade Says About the Principle of it—Example Furnished by Fruit and Produce Association—Some Retailers Claim Bigger Profits on Account of the Shorter Terms and Explain Why—a Check on the Unscrupulous Buyer.

The principle of shorter terms of credit is meeting with favor from retail merchants. A concrete example of the principle was supplied during the past summer by the action of the Toronto Fruit and Produce Association, which prior to May 1st issued a notice to the effect that all accounts must be settled weekly after that date.

It is well known to Grocer readers what the effect of this ultimatum was on grocers who handled fruit and produce. Many of them were indignant that good-pay grocers should be black-listed if they should happen to neglect the payment of their accounts within a specified time. Others looked at the matter in a different light, believing that this policy was the proper one to pursue.

There are arguments in favor of both contentions. It was not, however, with these arguments in veiw, that The Grocer interviewed different members of the retail and wholesale trade, regarding the shorter terms of credit. With the principle of it, practically all were of the same opinion and many went so far as to say that they made more money out of fruit during the past season because the weekly terms of credit existed. There may, of course, have been other causes—and others were suggested—which were conducive to the better profits in fruits.

Checks the Unscrupulous.

One of the greatest benefits of the shorter terms of credit to the trade in general is that it prevents the unscrupulous grocer or fruit dealer, who begins a business in the spring with the intention of buying on long credits and slashing prices in order to secure trade. That he is detrimental to the business of the community in which he is located is evident. He is dishonest if he doesn't pay his debts and unfair if they are not paid within a reasonable time. He is usually in the business for all he can get out of it, regardless of the injury he does his competitors.

Several retail grocers gave it as their opinions that the short terms of credit had prevented the working of many of this class and indirectly had allowed them to make more money on fruit this season than they ever did before with the same outlay and labor.

Prevents Over-Buying.

Others maintained that the principle of the short terms of credit had caused them to be more careful in buying from the fruit market. Occasionally they used to visit the market and if they saw a block of fruit offered at what they considered an extra good bargain, they purchased it. The chances were that when they came to sell such a quantity by retail, they found themselves overloaded, and thus the "big money" they anticipated making was turned to losses. The fruit rotted and had to be thrown away.

Several retailers throughout Ontario, as well as some of the wholesale fruit dealers, maintain that for this reason, the former made more money out of fruit this year.

A jobber in relating his experience said that when the shorter terms of credit were established last May, he had 113 delinquents on his books. To-day he had only 20. He had been told by several retailers, who in the beginning had opposed the scheme, that they were now entirely in favor of it. They had always kept ahead in their fruit department, bought what they were sure they would reasonably sell, and made good profits. Another admitted this, but claimed that a year ago the same could not have been accomplished. This year was a remarkably good one for fruit, and the majority of the Toronto jobbers had little difficulty in disposing of practically everything that was consigned to them.

Splendid Keeping Qualities.

No doubt there were other profits. A retailer attributed a great deal of his better fruit year to the fact that the Canadian crop was so excellent, that the quantity harvested was large, fruit was cheaper and therefore more of it was sold.

"When peaches retail at $1.25 per basket," he said, "the probability is that an intending purchaser will either pass them by or buy a single basket; but if they are 70 or 75 cents, she will likely take 2, 3 or even 4 baskets."

A jobber in reviewing the situation maintained that the good year was due to the fact that the keeping qualities of the fruit were superior to any past season. He had been 26 years in close touch with the Toronto market, and had never seen the fruit better. It was a significant fact that not once during the whole season did the scavenger have occasion to cart away a single barrel of spoiled fruit from his stand at the market. His firm had always sold all their fruit—with the exception of what deteriorated—but this year more than ever had been disposed of, principally, he thought, because more had come in. More attention had been paid to spraying, picking and packing, and the fruit had been in much better condition. Weather conditions, so far as selling was concerned, were also in favor of a profitable year.

This particular jobber was one of those not on the list requiring weekly payments. He was, however, in favor of the principle of shorter terms of credit, and thought that they may have done some good, particularly in checking the unscrupulous buyer. So far as preventing over-buying was concerned, he maintained that naturally no fruit retailer would be caught more than once. He might "get stuck" on a shipment, but it was not reasonable to expect that the error would be made again.

Retailers in places outside Toronto were almost unanimously in favor of the principle of the short term of credit. It helped them to receive more prompt payments from their customers; in fact, it gave them an impetus to look more closely after their accounts, and, as observed among the opinions of others, the price-cutter and dishonest dealer were kept more securely under control.

A PROHIBITIVE DUTY.

From St. Vincent it is reported that West Indian Arrowroot crops were good, but that the arrowroot industry is in a very unsatisfactory condition owing to over-production. What is desired is that something should be done to open the Canadian market. The duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem imposed by Canada is declared to be prohibitive. Cotton can only be grown on lands at low elevations near the coast, whereas arrowroot can be grown in all parts of the island. It has been grown to such an extent that the market is overstocked, and prices have become unremunerative. At anything under 2d. per lb. it is said to be not worth growing. The exports of arrowroot from St. Vincent in 1908-9 were 5,194,727 lbs., valued at £29,517.—British Trade Journal.

OFF TO THE WOODS.

No less than three members of the staff of the "Salada" Tea Co. are now in the wilds of Northern Ontario. J. K. Chambers, W. H. Barron and E. F. Whittemore. It is hoped that these ardent sportsmen will have good luck and prove themselves mighty Nimrods. Two weeks in the bush will make them keener than ever when they hit the business trail again.

SOME CANADIAN IMPORTS.

The imports of coffee into Canada during the year ending March 31st, 1909, according to the Trade and Commerce Department, Ottawa, were 10,151,891 lbs. valued at $1,001,016; chicory root, 233,670 lbs., valued at $10,950; cocoa, 5,579,221 lbs., valued at $1,049,707; green tea, 8,983,083 lbs., valued at $1,400,805, and black tea, 23,546,596 lbs., valued at $3,679,473.

Resume of the Evidence before the Royal Commission

Results of the Preference Given to the West Indies by the Canadian Government—Other Preferences Desired by Canadian Manufacturers — Better Transportation Facilities Required—Improvement Wanted in Cable Service.

In previous issues of The Canadian Grocer references have been made to the meetings of the Royal Commission on trade relations between Canada and the West Indies. A resume of the discussion in the various cities in Canada where sittings were held should prove of considerable interest to those anxious to see the betterment of trade relationship between these two countries.

One of the principal duties of the commission was to enquire to what dimensions the trade between Canada and the British West Indies had already attained; what increase had taken place in late years and to what causes it may reasonably have been attributed, and more especially how far such increase was due to the preference granted by the Canadian Government. The second duty was to consider by what means it may be possible to promote and extend this trade; to enquire and report as to what advantages the British West Indian colonies may be able and willing to give to imports from Canada, more particularly by the reduction of duties, and whether, on the other hand, the existing markets in Canada for West Indian produce, especially for sugar and molasses, may be secured and extended.

The commission consisted of Lord Balfour, of Burleigh; Sir Daniel Morris, Sir John Dickson-Poynder, Hon. W. S. Fielding, Hon. Wm. Patterson, R. H. McCarthy, Hon. Geo. Gordon, Lord Balfour's private secretary, and H. Russell Cowell, secretary of the commission.

The commission held its first meeting at Ottawa, on Sept. 22nd. The remainder of the itinerary was as follows: Toronto, Sept. 27th to 28th; St. John, N.B., 29th to 30th; Halifax, Oct. 1st to 2nd; Montreal, Oct. 4th to 5th.

Ottawa evidence was secured principally from government officials in touch with the trade relations between the two countries.

Business men were prominent in the evidence at Toronto. The lack of adequate transportation was urged as the principal drawback to an improvement of the trade between the West Indies and Canada, and several witnesses drew attention to the almost prohibitive cable rates—as high as 6s. per word from Demerara. Canadians share with West Indians the strong feeling that reform in these directions in imperatively needed. As a complete report of the sitting in Toronto was published in the issue of Oct. 1st, it is not necessary to go further into the points brought out in the evidence. The chief witnesses were J. D. Allen, who was chairman of the deputation of the Toronto, St. John, and Halifax Boards of Trade which made a trip through the West Indies; Hedley Shaw, of the Hedley Shaw Milling Co.; G. M. Murray, secretary of the Canadian Manufacturing Association; H. N. Cowan, manager of the Cowan Co., and Sir Amelius Irving.

Want Preference on Flour.

At St. John, New Brunswick, the fish exporters, who gave evidence, agreed that they required no preferential tariff on fish or lumber, fearing no competition in those articles. The witnesses favored a preferential duty on flour, which they believed would turn towards Canada the whole of the British West India flour trade of 500,000 barrels annually. They advocated the establishment of storage warehouses at Atlantic ports, with goods for West Indian markets, which would enable orders to be executed immediately, and would avoid the delays caused by the long Canadian railway journey to the seaboard.

A Combine Contention.

The Canadian sugar refiners were heard at Halifax where R. E. Harris, director of the Acadia sugar refinery, was under examination for several hours. He maintained that the planters from the British West Indies took all the advantage of the preferential tariff, leaving nothing for Canadian importers. He alleged that higher prices were charged by them for sugar landed in Canada than for that landed in New York. He opposed reciprocity between Canada and the West Indies unless safeguards were provided against the present combination by the planters, which he said threatened to extinguish the Canadian sugar refining industry.

The Montreal Sitting.

Of the points brought out at the Montreal sitting of the Royal Commission investigating trade relations between Canada and the West Indies, three seemed to be of the most vital interest. They were: the matter of better transportation, the establishment of a reciprocal preferential tariff; and the improvement of the cable service.

On the first point nearly all witnesses were agreed that, under existing conditions, very little could be done to improve trade, the present service being too slow. Cold storage was not provided for fruit imports, and for this reason most of such cargoes came through New York.

W. H. D. Miller, of Stevens & Miller, in talking to a representative of The Grocer, expressed a concise opinion of the whole subject.

A Fortnightly Service.

Suggestions as to speed of steamers seemed to coincide. They should be moderately fast, at least 13 to 14 knots per hour, and should run every fortnight. Montreal seemed to be the choice as a summer port with Halifax or St. John during the winter months. The chief reason advanced in favor of Montreal being chosen as the summer terminal was that its central situation enabled most economical boat or rail shipments to all parts of Canada. For instance, shipments would be made entirely by boat to or from any point on the great lakes. It was argued that a much better freight rate could be given if the rail haul could be largely dispensed with, and this could only be accomplished by making Montreal the summer terminal.

J. Russell Murray, importer, who is largely interested in the transportation question, on account of his fruit trade, suggested that if such a line could be started, the steamers should call at some of the St. Lawrence river ports on each trip, making the calls alternately, thus giving these ports direct connection, and not materially interfering with speed.

Regarding cable service, he agreed with Lord Balfour that it would be impossible to improve it much on account of the volcanic sea bed over which the wires had to pass. Breakages were frequent and unavoidable. A system of wireless seemed to him to be the only practicable solution of the difficulty.

Against the Preference.

The only dissenting voice on the preferential tariff was that of the sugar refiners, who wanted the tarif on both raw and refined sugar done away with. All other witnesses thought more complete reciprocity would be very beneficial to all concerned. Lists were presented by one witness as to what lines should be included in such an arrangement.

A good suggestion was made by one man, the establishment of a government bureau in Montreal to look after Canada-West Indies interests. It would need only one well-informed man to constitute such a bureau, and he could do a great deal of good toward keeping merchants in both colonies in touch with each other.

Generally speaking, the commission had the effect of bringing men of varied interests together on the common ground of trade improvement, and emphasized the fact that they all had the same troubles, or practically the same. It was shown that it is only a question of obtaining concerted action to enable proper steps to be taken to remedy the present defects, chiefly three, as was stated before—poor transportation facilities, poor cable service, and an inadequate reciprocal tariff. When these are remedied, it is prophesied that Canada and the West Indies will be as close together as any two Canadian provinces are now. It is certainly worth a big effort to obtain such a result.

A Retail Grocer's Grievance Against the Jobber

Maintains that the Cutting Out of Cash Discounts is Unfair—Touches on the Secret Rebate Problem — Practical Suggestions on Store Methods by Hamilton Merchants — Live Questions in the Minds of the Trade.

Special Staff Correspondence.

Hamilton, Ont., November 3.—The cutting out of many of the cash discounts formerly given by wholesalers is the subject of much adverse criticism by Hamilton grocers.

One of them remarked in discussing the question: "I am not at all satisfied with what they have done in this respect; I maintain the giving the cash discount is the only fair way to do. It may not be fair that a strong grocer can purchase 10 cases of goods cheaper per case than a weaker one can buy one or two cases, and yet this is being done right along.

"But there is no reason why the man who pays cash should not have an allowance on his money, and in an upright, honest way.

"It is a well-known fact that some grocers have cheek enough to take money to the wholesale houses, and by a humiliating shuffle get a rebate; but a man possessed with the dignity of a business man will not stoop to such means, and yet he often feels that he is entitled to it."

Separate Place for Fish.

The necessity of keeping groceries provisions, fish, etc., in different departments is well exemplified by a Hamilton grocer.

"I keep my goods in four departments," he said; "it is obvious that I should not place fish for instance in proximity to groceries."

He also took particular interest in the training of the salesman in the store and advocated salesmen reading their trade paper carefully—more especially articles in reference to themselves.

"Where clerks do not take The Canadian Grocer," he remarked, "the 'boss' should hand them over his own and find out what they learned when reading it; the paper is full of information too valuable for any clerk to miss."

Not Afraid of Light.

Another grocer is a strong advocate of keeping windows in good shape and well lighted. "I think money spent in good light is well spent," he said. "To have windows well dressed with a few attractive price-cards, and lighted up every night after the store is closed is good advertising. Bright light is bound to draw trade.

Speaking on another subject, he said: "I am always very careful not to overrate anything; it is far better if the goods turn out above what they were represented, than below, you know.

"We sometimes load our delivery wagons in front of the store and sometimes at the rear. For some reasons I like to load up at the rear, but I realize the fact that to load up a good big load in front of the store has a valuable advertising effect.

How to Gain Confidence.

"To gain the confidence of the people is the great secret in business," he continued, "and this cannot be done in a day; it takes years, but when once established the success of the business is assured. It is not enough to be honest, but you have to understand the nature of the goods you sell, so that you can talk intelligently about them."

In every walk of life one crosses paths of individuals who appear to have missed their calling in life, as the old saying goes. The grocery store requires more than anything else an obliging proprietor and obliging salesmen. Where these are lacking the want is usually reflected in the whole store. Imagine a merchant greeting a representative of a trade paper who is collecting and suggesting practical store methods being greeted in this ungrammatical and discourteous language: "Times is good; everything is lovely; I have no time to read The Grocer; it may be all right for you, but 'taint for me."

This same grocer, nevertheless, has worked out a good idea in handling his coal-oil. It is carried in a box or tank under the delivery wagon and taken out by tap at customers' houses, whenever wanted. It is handy, saves cans and protects the groceries from a coal oil taste.

Selling by Weight.

There is one Hamilton grocer who keeps no dry measures in his store; he sells all his potatoes, carrots, etc., by weight and he is anxiously waiting to see the government adopt a standard of 75 lbs. as the legal weight of a bag of potatoes. It will be more easily handled he maintains.

"Here is a good thing," remarked a merchant referring to rubber hooks for his tea scoops.

"You see we have a number of tea chests here with different varieties of tea, and we use two scoops to handle all these teas. These were usually thrown into the chests where the last teas were taken from, and when you wanted one again you often had to look through all to find it. Now we drop them on these two rubber hooks, where they are al-always handy and always in place. The reason I got rubber hooks is to save the scoops from becoming dinged and from making a noise when you hurriedly throw them on.

"I have another hobby of my own, which may seem rather ancient, but after all I prefer it to small bags for spices and other articles in small quantities, and that is the old fashioned "cornucopia" or cone shaped twirls. We have a particular knack in making them, which we do when we have time, and they are cheaper, save the string and a salesman can do one up in one-third the time it takes when he uses the ordinary bag, and the packages look better."

"Some time ago," said another grocer, " I saw an article in The Canadian Grocer referring to the question of biscuit manufacturers invoicing their goods at retail prices with 20 per cent. off. I consider that a good idea and it should be put into practice."

Still another desires to see the Division Court Act amended so as to give it some practical value to merchants and advocates that the matter be taken up with the government at the earliest possible opportunity.

Successful Methods Adopted by Canadian Grocers

Western Canadian Merchant Becomes Member of Parliament—Niagara-on-the-Lake Grocer Closes Early Every Night—How a St. John Grocer Displays Bread —Special Show Card Sells Goods—What to do with Used Butter Boxes.

Western Merchant in Parliament.

Strathcona, Alta., Nov. 2.—Western business men are steadily working their way into political life, as the unanimous election of Jas. H. Douglas, general merchant, to fill the vacancy in the Strathcona Federal riding proves. There were no other nominees. Mr. Douglas went west from Lanark in 1868, and after attending school in Winnipeg he qualified as teacher. In 1886 he entered the mercantile field as a clerk. In 1893 he went to Edmonton and became senior clerk for the W. Johnston Walker firm in that city.

About twelve years ago with his brother, R. B. Douglas, then of Winnipeg, he moved to Strathcona and they formed a partnership as general merchants and began the building of the business which they still own and continue to develop.

Early Closing Every night.

Niagara-on-the-Lake, Nov. 3.—Beginning on Monday, November 1, the Central Grocery closed at 7 o'clock in the evening and will continue to do so for the winter months. Mr. Ryan's example will probably be followed by the other merchants, as during the winter season little business is transacted after 7 o'clock. Their early closing will give the merchants a chance to spend their evenings at home or to visit their friends. While some people may not like the early closing of the stores, they will soon do as others do, go out in the afternoon and do their shopping. The merchants require a little leisure, so as to keep things running smoothly at home.

Displays Bread in Glass Case.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 2.—To the average grocer, who sells bread and who keeps his stock in a barrel or a bin, out of sight, the idea adopted by a grocer in St. John might offer a suggestion for improvement. This dealer had a large square glass case, with plate glass shelves that was used for butter, with an ice box at the top. Some time ago a cold storage room was built for the butter and now the glass case makes an excellent place for keeping bread. It is clean and dry and keeps the loaves from being crushed or broken, as well as displaying them to customers. The ice box is, of course, no longer utilized, but pyramids of package biscuit are displayed on the top effectively.

Equipment of a New Store.

New Glasgow, N.S., Nov. 2.—Recognizing the value of an attractive store, both outside and inside, James McArthur & Son, have completed a new and elaborate grocery establishment.

From the outside it is particularly ornamental with its brick facings and large windows, but inside it is more handsome. The counters are of handsome varnished oak, while along the wall on either side are convenient and handsome oak fixtures, and bins, patterned after the latest design in up-to-date grocery store equipment. The building is heated with steam, the ceilings are of ornamental steel and painted a clean white, the floor is of hardwood, and everything suggests that they have not spared any expense in making the store attractive. Even the tobaccos are given special attention in a handsome case with patent equipment for keeping the goods moist. The lighting arrangement is also very prettily arranged. The store is being carefully stocked with a large list of the best groceries, and long experience has given the firm an advantage in this respect.

How Butter is Tainted.

Perth, Ont., Nov. 3.—"We retailers should, it seems to me, object to the using of butter boxes the second time," remarked a local grocer recently.

"Very often while waiting for enough to accumulate to ship back, they are piled in a yard or it may be that they are used in front of the store to pile basket fruit upon. Here they very often receive that attention from canines, which we do not wish our fruit to get. These same boxes may be returned to the creamery or may be bought at a low figure by a commission house to be again used for butter. Do you wonder then that boxes are sometimes dirty, or butter tainted, when it comes in these packages?"

Dummy Barrels and Boxes.

Quebec, Nov. 3. — There are many times when it is not convenient to display a full barrel, say of cranberries. It is a simple matter to make a tray which will fit in the top of an empty barrel, and when filled, gives the same advertising effect as a full one. A single barrel can be made to do the work of three or four in this way, and makes cheap and good advertising. A Quebec grocer works out this idea with good results.

Post Salesmen on Leaders.

Montreal, Nov. 3. — "Bronsdon's," confectioners, Montreal, have a "special" every day, and advertise it fully, both by newspaper and window display. It is an idea they say that is not used half enough. Specialize on some one line every day and advertise it, either by show cards, window display, newspaper ads., or any combination of the above. It will pay. See that the store salesmen know what you are doing.

Special Show Card Sold Goods.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 2.—"Not exposed to the Dust of the Street," is the way one of the local retail grocers recently advertised a big window display of grapes in baskets. The idea found favor with his customers, for he reports that sales were excellent.

"I have found," he said, "that putting grapes, plums, berries and other fruits out at the door or along the outside of the windows, is not the best plan in the world to get and keep trade. While no doubt many people have their attention drawn to goods thus prominently displayed, yet on the other hand it is not always in the best interests of the dealer to adopt such methods. On a dusty day fruits will collect a lot of dirt and in a short time will lose their attractiveness, and people have often looked and then passed on, remarking that things didn't look clean. It struck me that a good window display with a card such as I have now, would appeal to the lovers of cleanliness, and I have found that I was right, for my sales have increased in consequence.

"This method of piling a whole lot of stuff, especially perishable goods out on the sidewalks, does not appeal to me as in the best interests of the dealer. as the goods so exposed soon suffer, and in consequence, often times have to be reduced in price to get rid of them."

A Perth Advertising Scheme.

Perth, Ont., Nov. 3.—C. A. Farmer & Son, Perth, Ont., place a sticker bearing the firm name, lines of goods handled, and address, on all package and bottle goods they sell. Take this label on a bottle of crisp pickles for example. The majority of families use pickles direct from the bottle. Every time that bottle is placed on the table those around it cannot help but be aware that Farmers' sell pickles, and if they like the pickles they say that "Farmers' sell goods pickles."

It works out in the same way with many other package and bottled goods. The label used is the following, printed in white letters on red paper an inch and three-quarters by an inch in dimensions:

C. A. Farmer & Son, groceries, china, confectionery and fruit, Gore Street, Perth, Ont.

Montreal Concerned in Italian Cheese Frauds

Consignment from Italy Destined for New York Ordered by Wireless to Montreal—False Weights Given on 220 Cases Representing a Saving of More than $1,000 on One Shipment—United States Customs Officers Implicated.

Montreal, November 3.—One of the most important customs frauds of recent years has just come to light in New York. Antonio and Philip Musica have just been tried for defrauding the U.S. Customs on importations of Italian cheese.

At the time the discovery was made, another cargo of 206 cases was on the water, invoiced to New York. The Musicas, it is said, communicated by wireless and had the destination changed to Montreal. At the latter port a new invoice was made out, giving the right weights of the shipment and it was reshipped to a dummy concern, A. Mauro, in New York. Prosecution on this offence was thus avoided.

To enable the government to make out their case, immunity had to be promised to several of the men implicated, even to the extent of retaining one of them in the employ of the customs department.

Philip Musica, the son, testified that he alone, of the firm, was responsible for the entire system of frauds, in conjunction with several customs employees. The scheme was suggested to him, he said, by James Hyland, a customs inspector, who has been missing for the past month, Hyland introduced Musica to James F. Vail, the deputy collector of customs for the port of New York, who arranged the deal.

The specific instance on which the prosecution was made, was the false weights of 220 cases of cheese landed by the S.S. Cretic recently. The shipment actually weighed 18,000 lbs. more than it was invoiced at, and the alleged fraud saved over $1,000 to those concerned. The amount which has been lost to the customs is hard to estimate, as the frauds are said to have been going on for some years.

The scheme in detail was this, according to report: Consular invoices giving false weights on Italian cheese consignments, were verified by New York Customs officials. The money saved was divided between the shipper in Italy, the government weigher and his associates, and the Musica concern. One weigher, Hutcheson, testified that in the particular instance upon which the trial was based, he had received $500 out of the $1,050 saved. He added the statement, which hardly seemed necessary, that he was not a cheap man. Further questioning elicited the fact that it was customary among some customs officials to solicit merchants with a view to defrauding the government.

Healthy Condition of Western Canadian Trade

United States Banker Makes a Close Study of the Situation—Improvement Over Last Year—Board of Trade Wants Lowering of Telegraph Rates.

Staff Correspondence.

Winnipeg, Nov. 2.—A United States banker visited the west recently for the purpose of investigating actual commercial conditions. As a result of the visit the following report was published across the line.—

"In the northwest trade is not only good, but real estate transactions are increasing, money is easy and a large number of tourists continue to visit the country. A good expansion and heavy immigration is expected next year. Weather conditions continue favorable throughout Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Threshing of wheat is about completed in the first named province, and it is well advanced in the last mentioned. The weather has been excellent for plowing, and a goodly increase in acreage is indicated. The railways have all the wheat they can handle, and the movement to date surpasses that of other years. Business failures for the week ending with Thursday last, number 24, which compares with 30 last week and 32 in the same week last year. Bank clearings for the week terminating with Thursday of this week aggregate $105,361,000, sixteen per cent. below last week's, but seventeen per cent. over those of the same week last year."

Lowering of Telegraph Rates.

An important conference is to be held in the next few days, between a special committee appointed by the Winnipeg Board of Trade and James Kent, superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, telegraph department, regarding the lowering of rates. It is not known whether it is possible to lower the rates or not, and the exact nature of the board's request is not known. A committee of the Board of Trade has also been investigating cable rates, and it is understood that appeals will soon be made to proper authorities regarding some immediate relief of the commercial man's position in this direction. The board's action is in continuance of the pressure so successfully brought to bear by the Imperial Press Conference.

That which will mean much to the commercial life of the west in years to come, was seriously discussed in Prince Albert by the Board of Trade in that place. The board have decided to take up the proposition of making the Saskatchewan river navigable from Winnipeg through to Edmonton. They will at once draft a resolution to the Government, urging its attention to the project. The possibility of this project has been for years enthusiastically asserted by a few citizens of the west.

REVERSED POTATO SEIZURE

The Divisional Court at Toronto, has allowed the appeal of C. J. McMillan & Son, of Hamilton, and reversed the decision of Judge Chadwick, of Hamilton, in the case of McMillan v. Thorp. A carload of potatoes was the cause of the dispute. The goods were seized by the sheriff and sold by George J. Thorp to settle a debt claim which the latter had against C. J. McMillan. The seizure and sale were upheld by Judge Chadwick, of Hamilton, and McMillan & Son appealed against this decision on the ground that the potatoes were the property of the firm and not of C. J. McMillan himself. The appeal was granted.

THE BEATTIE CO. CASE SETTLED.

A case which has been before the courts for five years, that of Beattie v. Dickson, was settled last Thursday at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, before Justice Riddell, by the defendant agreeing to pay plaintiff $5,000 and retain stock in the British America Assurance Co. which had cost $10,800. The case arose out of the winding-up of Beattie & Co., of St. Mary's. The defendant Dickson had managed the business from the time of Mr. Beattie's death in 1888, until 1903, when the shop was destroyed by fire. It was then decided to wind up the business, but the parties could not agree. Mr. Beattie's widow laid charges of mismanagement of the estate against Dickson, but the Master at Stratford, who took account, said that the books had been accurately kept under Dickson. The plaintiffs had appealed this judgment, but have since come to an agreement out of court. The Beattie Co. had stores at St. Mary's, Thedford, Stratford and Ingersoll. The business conducted by Mr. Dickson at St. Mary's is a general store business—one of the finest in western Ontario. The Stratford and Ingersoll stores conducted by Mrs. Beattie are grocery businesses of exceptionally high character.

H. E. Henry, St. Catharines, Ont., who for the past nine years has conducted a thriving business at the corner of Niagara and Church Sts., has sold to his brother and Mr. Glackin. The new firm will be known as Henry & Glackin.

Department in Aid of the Retail Grocery Salesman

Montreal Merchant Uses Scientific Methods in Training His Employes—Have to Serve Apprenticeship Before They are Allowed to Wait on Customers—Must Save Money Right From the Start, Which is Banked by Employer.

A certain grocer in Montreal has a unique plan for hiring his clerks which proves satisfactory to both employer and employes.

No person can work in his store if he cannot save a part of his salary. A boy with him cannot get behind the counter to serve customers without the necessary training and this is not obtained by driving a delivery wagon and helping in a store for a few weeks. He must serve an apprenticeship for three years and one whole year before he can wait on a customer.

When this merchant engages a boy he must know how much money he requires to pay his way. If it should take all he can afford to give him, he won't hire him, unless he can cut down his expenses so that he can save money, which he regularly deposits in the bank for him. He claims that a boy who does not save something for himself in order to make headway in the world is not likely to try to help him get ahead.

Besides looking at it from a selfish standpoint, he also considers it his duty to help the boy not only to become a more valuable servant but as well to assist him in forming better habits.

Duties During First Year.

The first year he must help the clerks by fetching things from the cellar or warehouse; in packing and unpacking goods and in making himself useful about the place, but he never allows him to serve a customer.

In this way he gets a thorough training in accuracy, promptness and obedience, as well as learning the rare accomplishment of saving, as his bank account is piling up.

This system has been so successful and satisfactory that rarely a clerk leaves until his bank pile is big enough to start him in business for himself. The first few years the bank deposits must necessarily be small, but as the salary advances the deposits are increased. So interesting does this saving become to them that they deny themselves a great many of the frivolties other boys indulge in, in order to add more to their growing bank account. The most pleasant and harmonious feeling exist between the firm and the salesmen and all through the mutual interest in each other. The willingness, promptness and cheerfulness with which the work is done, show the wisdom of the system.

Replenishes the Shelves.

The bulk of the stock is kept in the warehouse and in the cellar, and with this the apprentice is more familiar than the higher clerks. He watches the shelves and as soon as any line is nearly sold out he replenishes it, and in that way everything looks fresh and clean.

If this system or a similar one were adopted in general, the salesmen would soon become so expert in their work that the inexperienced who begin business without any training or experience would get little support.

To overcome the unhealthy competition from incompetent grocers, it is necessary to raise the standard of service, and this can only be done through better trained salesmen.

ENCOURAGE THE SALESMAN.

Appreciation Should be Shown if They do Good Work.

By Stanley Nicholson.

A lot has been written and a lot has been said about the importance of successful salesmanship in the grocery store, and while there may be few grocers who do not appreciate it, there seems to be many who do not express their appreciation.

Salesmanship, particularly in the grocery store, depends a great deal upon the proprietor. The employe may have exceptional ability, but rest assured the best that is in him will not come out, unless under favorable conditions.

The employer who appreciates the ability of a clever young salesman but is careful not to let the clerk know it, fearing that he may get "the swelled head" or want a dollar more in his pay envelope, is penny wise and pound foolish.

The manager who treats his salesmen in a stand-offish manner, and hands them down their wages as one might hand alms to a beggar, is not often to be found now-a-days managing a successful store. On the contrary it is the man who talks to and treats his clerks as his fellow men and even as his friends, taking a personal interest in them and yet holding their respect, who gets the best out of his clerks.

The salesman who on Saturday night takes off his apron after a hard week's work will sleep better, enjoy his Sunday more, and come back a more energetic enthusiastic and an all-round better salesman on Monday morning, if while saying good night he heard just a cheery word or two of appreciation from his boss.

Should be Backed by Employer.

There are other ways, though, and more practical ways, in which salesmen can be helped and in which bosses can show their appreciation. One of these is in the general management of the store. The wise grocer will stand right back of his salesmen and will do his uttermost to help them make good the promises they make to their customers.

The clerks don't like being called down by some particular customer, "because those cans of lobsters didn't come in time for the salad." But they cannot say anything. They promised solemnly that the order would be delivered at a certain hour, at the very latest, so they have to take the "calling down" for faults that are really not theirs. The employer should take great pains to help in this way rather than hinder the good work of his clerks.

Some Window Display Suggestions for Christmas

Season Has Arrived When Particular Attention Should Be Given to This Phase of Advertising—Methods Used by Prize-Winners in 1908 Contests—Care Needed in Changing Displays.

It is quite apparent that Canadian grocers are taking more interest in the art of displaying goods as the years go by. Readers of The Canadian Grocer have no doubt observed this long ago, from a study of the various windows, which have been shown from time to time in competitions or otherwise; and now with Christmas time only a few weeks away more energy than at any other time during the year should be expended in making attractive windows.

Grocers should not retain the idea that one display for Christmas is sufficient. Just as the advertisement in the daily or weekly newspaper should be changed, so should the display-window. It is advisable to see that a new window is put in every week, particularly between the Thangsgiving and Christmas seasons. Everyone knows how a window out of the ordinary in the grocery store is talked about by the local townspeople and grocery travelers—and hence the advisability of getting something new and at the same time profitable.

It is the aim of The Canadian Grocer to encourage a greater interest in window dressing, and in the last two issues announcements have been made of prizes offered for the best holiday window displays and newspaper advertisements used during the coming holiday season. Window displays arranged by window trimmers in Canadian grocery stores are also shown in this issue.

In offering prizes for displays a division has been made in which grocers and clerks doing business in the larger cities do not compete with those in the smaller towns and villages, a double set of prizes being awarded.

Some Practical Hints.

Last year the first prize in the contest for the cities over 10,000 population (Class No. 1), went to Harry Young, a clerk in Fred Carne's grocery, Victoria, B.C.

His window, which is shown herewith, was banked up from the front about four feet on an angle. The sides are Sultanas and Valencias. Apples on the outside of them and currants in the middle. Peels form the dividing lines. A Merry Xmas is laid in cube sugar. The rest of the window is white bunting trimmed with holly and silver tinsel. On the top stand boxes of prunes and bon-bons, with tinsel around the sides of the boxes. Boxes of figs, with red and green ribbon trimming. Other rows are fruit, bunches of grapes and fancy boxes of candy and bon-bons.

Up the sides of the windows are pink boards with holly leaves and lettering in silver tinsel. The middle of the window is a large looking glass reflecting back the fruit in front, looking like a hole. The roof is all boxed in with white bunting with a hole in the middle for the light to hang in. There are two hundred and fifty glass prisms attached to the roof with silver pendants here and there, with holly on the sides and silver tinsel around the hole were the lamp hangs. At the back are red ribbons twisted, forming a sun burst.

Price Tickets Used.

The idea of the window of P. Connal & Son, Peterboro, Ont., which took second prize in Class I, was to emphasize the quality of the goods as the Queen of Quality. The central figure, a beautiful doll, dressed in royal robes, with a crown of gold on her head, stands under a light canopy made of light framework trimmed with silver paper, with a white sateen curtain as a background. The roof is made from paper covered with silver paper. The ridges of roof are trimmed with holly, with silver tinsel hung in loops along the eaves as a finish. The floor of the window was built up at the back with steps leading down to the front of the window. The whole was covered with white sheet cotton batting. Along the front of the window are arranged nuts of all kinds, with price tickets attached. On the steps are placed fancy table raisins in layers, fancy box candies, also candies in fancy glass dishes with price tickets on each. On either side of the steps are pillars made from a length of stove-pipe covered with white cotton, with blocks of wood top and bottom covered with turkey red cotton. On top of each of these five pillars are placed a cheese box cover, covered with white and trimmed with holly. These were all filled with different kinds of candy, which were sold at special prices during the Christmas season, each kind with a price card on it. A clothes basket filled with California seedless oranges, placed on each side of the queen's canopy, completed the window.

In subsequent issues other Christmas windows will be reproduced with ideas showing how similar ones may be arranged.

FIRM TEA MARKET.

T. H. Estabrooks, of St. John, N.B., proprietor of Red Rose Tea, was in Toronto for a few days last week. "The tea markets," Mr. Estabrooks said, when asked about the trend of prices, "continues very firm." The advance has been so persistent that even in Ontario 25c teas, which have always had a considerable sale, are becoming impossible.

Mr. Estabrooks, who is vice-president of the St. John Board of Trade, has been in Ottawa with a deputation of St. John business men to urge upon the Government the necessity for establishing a dry dock in Canada's winter port.

AN AVERAGE WALNUT CROP.

Discussing the walnut crop situation in France, C. N. P. Nason, of Grenoble, writes under date of Sept. 30: The crop is now in process of harvesting and drying. The first shipments for America will probably begin about October 10. The estimates given in the July report will be virtually realized. The crop is an average one in quantity, and generally good in quality. The nuts are rather smaller than usual, attributable to unfavorable weather for development in the early spring; at the same time, they appear to be well filled with meat. The opening prices, it is thought, will rule higher than last year. Farmers are asking as much as 75 francs ($14.48) per 100 kilos, as against 65 francs (12.55) the previous year. This is probably due to the recent and animated demand on the part of American buyers for walnuts of last season's crop.

A considerable quantity of these last year's nuts, which could not be disposed of in the earlier part of the year, were left in the hands of speculators, who had begun to lose hope of realizing on them at a profit. Indeed in the continued absence of orders they would have been willing in a very short time to sell at a sacrifice, in view of the approaching abundant new crop.

ACT MAY NEVER BE ENFORCED.

Regarding the "Extra-Provincial Corporations Act" of Manitoba, the date of enforcement of which has been postponed, as announced in last week's issue, a high authority of the Manitoba Government in discussing the matter with this paper, stated that "it is true the enforcement of the penalty clause may ed."

There is now, however, in force in Manitoba an act known as "The Foreign Corporations Act," governing the question of taking out a license to do business within the province. Regarding this Act, Deputy-Provincial Secretary Jas. Hooper writes The Canadian Grocer as follows: "Even now, under 'The Foreign Corporations Act,' all extra-provincial corporations should take out a license, and this they would realize should they desire to utilize local institutions such as the Land Titles Office or the courts."

The Grocer, however, knows that the statement regarding the use of the courts does not hold good, as we have in mind at the present time a case where judgment was given in favor of a company doing business in Manitoba which did not have a license.

A WEAK CURRANT MARKET.

It is interesting and instructive to review the Greek currant situation during the past month or more. Information to hand supplied from Patras, Greece, during the early part of September shows that much damage had been done to the crops by rain all over the currant country. This resulted in the quality of the currants being much inferior to the general anticipations and in consequence exerted a pressure on prices, causing the market to become weaker. About one-third of the crop was stated to have suffered from the rain.

The next report about the middle of September, did not indicate any improvement in the weak state of the market owing to the fact that the local purchases were if anything weaker than before. At that time, too, the actual demand from England was exceedingly poor, shown by the fact that this season's shipments to that country were then about 12,000 tons less than shipments made in the same period last year. The large amount of inferior fruit rejected by Patras buyers also exerted a pressure which only could improve as the season advanced and stocks of inferior qualities diminished. Prices therefore dropped further.

The third report showed a little different situation with primary market prices stronger. The financial requirements previously demanded by growers had subsided and supplies from the interior were very scanty. Another factor tending to the advance in the market was the anticipation of enquiries from Germany for low class currants for wine-making purposes. That would of course tend to clear the market of rain damaged material. Enquiry from England was also expected and the fact that Christmas was near at hand was considered to be a help to matters.

At the present time, however, the currant market is still weak. This is principally due to the poor demand and the poor quality. Raisins are cheap and will be cheaper and therefore, are being used to a considerable extent in preference to currants.

ALMERIA GRAPES FIRM.

Almeria grapes are firm in price. The reason for this are the facts that the demand is splendid, the quality is good and the crop not so large as recently anticipated. Some damage was caused to the crops by rain according to late reports, and buying on these conditions naturally firmed up the market without as yet appreciably increasing the cost to the retailer.

A representative of a large Canadian wholesale fruit firm had intended last week to obtain a supply through New York as usual, but, owing to the high price and the fact that the duty amounts to 2 cents per pound or 90 cents per barrel from the United States to Canada, he had to look to the Liverpool market for his Almeria grapes.

CHEESE GOING UP.

There seems to be no doubt that dealers who had confidence in the future of the cheese business this coming winter will have their opinion vindicated. The New Zealand crop has proved disappointing, and already the effect has been shown in England, where values have risen from ½ to ½ cent.

Prophecies are that cheese will be high this winter, owing partly to the New Zealand situation, and partly to our own here in Canada.

The disturbing element in Canada seems to be the development of the cream and milk exportation to the United States. Many cheese factories have closed down entirely, and are devoting themselves to taking advantage of United States dairy prices. It is causing a shortage in offerings, and will be almost sure to make itself felt in the prices here this winter.

The continued subsidy granted by the Canadian government to the Allan Line for a direct line of French steamers, assumes added importance in view of the new trade treaty, which has been passed by the French government and which will almost assuredly be ratified by our own at the next session. This combination will make a great difference in the present trade conditions between the two countries, making the future prospects of a large increase seem almost certain.

Trade with France has been somewhat spasmodic. At times, owing to more frequent direct steamers, it has proven very good, giving some idea of what could be accomplished in this direction if proper steps were taken to foster this trade. The establishment of a good, direct service is a long step in the right direction, and in connection with the treaty, is sure to give Franco-Canadian commerce a big boom.

The Allan line ships are scheduled by their contract to make not less than fifteen round voyages during the year at an average speed of ten knots per hour. There will be at least two round trips per month from May to November, with a smaller number during the winter months.

DUMPING GROUND FOR IMPURE GOODS.

In a recent issue of the Democrat and Chronicle, Rochester, N. Y., that paper refers to Canada as being a dumping ground for impure foods from the United States, which are not allowed to be sold in the country to the south of us in view of the Pure Food Law in existence there. The Rochester paper says :

> The good people of Canada have a fresh grievance against the United States, a grievance that is serious and not easy to bear. It is asserted in a bulletin issued by the Inland Revenue Department of the Dominion that adulterated food manufacturers are making the country a dumping ground for foods driven out of the United States by the pure food law. In addition to the national enactment many States have legislated against adulterated food products. Every step taken here in this direction aggravates the situation across the border, for the manufacturer sets at once to work to sell his prohibited product there. This is especially true of spices. Out of 145 samples of ground cloves collected in various localities only 74 were genuine. Chicory and roasted grain are frequently found in coffee. Native wines are sold as foreign brands. Our sympathy naturally goes out to the Canadians, while at the same time we cannot refrain from rejoicing over this negative testimony of the efficiency of our pure food legislation.

From the above it is evident that it is time Canada was protected by food standards. Of course the impression one receives on reading the extract from the Rochester paper for the first time would be somewhat exaggerated.

The Inland Revenue Department report and its setting in the newspaper leads a person to believe that practically the whole trouble over the adulteration of ground cloves was attributable to the United States manufacturers. This is not the case.

No doubt the fact that some manufacturers in the States cannot dispose of impure goods has directed them to Canada, but not to a very great extent. The duty on ground cloves for instance from the United States is about 25 p.c. and it would scarcely be profitable to have them sent in here. Whole cloves containing too high a proportion of stems could and no doubt have been shipped into Canada at a profit to firms in the States. In the Food Standards as drawn up by A. McGill, Chief Analyst of the Dominion Government the percentage of clove stems must not exceed 5 p.c.

But apart from this it is known to be a fact that many articles of food sold to Canadian consumers are adulterated and not sold as mixtures or compounds. The Pure Food Law of the United States prevents such an occurrence and it is such a law—one framed with a view to being fair to the honest manufacturer, jobber and retailer—that is required in Canada. The Food Standards now being drawn up will tend to produce the desired results and will prevent Canada from being the "dumping ground" for impure foods from the southern country, as represented by the Inland Revenue Department through the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

BETTER PACKING NEEDED.

The outlook for home grown fruit is very poor in England this year, and on that account it behooves Canadians to see that the bulk of the extra demand is thrown toward this country.

Our greatest competitor, the United States, is less advantageously placed, in that apples hold first place in England very largely on account of weight. Latest statistics show that our apples weigh, on an average, ten pounds per barrel more than theirs, thus enabling Canadians to maintain their lead, provided, of course, equal care is used in packing and shipment. There is certainly no good reason why we should lose in this respect, yet of late there have been more objections than usual to the packing of apples received from this country. One authority says that continued dishonest and careless packing will eventually lead to distrust of all grades of our apples, thus enabling our neighbor, the United States, to increase her hold on this market.

Commission men should insist on honest and careful packing, and farmers should voluntarily do their part toward seeing that our reputation for the best apples is upheld.

Owing to a difference in season, Australia and Tasmania are not rivals to be feared, as their crop is usually all disposed of in the spring and summer. It is therefore plain whom we have to fear, and with a little systematic work done by producers and commission men working together, Canadian apples will still remain first choice on the English market.

TO PROMOTE BEE CULTURE.

The Ontario government has added another important branch to the work at the Agricultural College, Guelph, Ont., and it is now giving instruction in bee-keeping. Some time ago one of the correspondents of The Canadian Grocer called attention to the possibilities of bee culture in this country, and he will therefore naturally look for great results from this effort.

This year a single bee-keeper procured from three bee-yards over 33,500 lbs. of honey. It is known to bee-keepers that bees venture about 3 miles away from the apiary in search of honey. This would show that each yard can cover an area about 6 miles square or containing 36 square miles, and the three yards 108 square miles. From this 108 square miles therefore was gathered 33,500 lbs. of honey, and perhaps not half of the honey was collected from that space.

This will give us some idea of the possibilities of the honey production. There are 260,862 square miles in Ontario, which, after deducting about ¼ for water would still leave land enough to produce about 70 million lbs. of honey, and the most wonderful feature of this venture is the fact, that all this honey could be produced without interfering with the production of any other farm commodities. It, therefore, would be clear gain, with the exception of the labor in connection with it.

Besides, not occupying land space nor robbing anything of its own needs, bees are actually a necessity to plant life so that the results from the proper development of this industry are beyond comprehension.

HOLDING CUSTOMERS.

Can you think of any farmer in your locality who has suddenly ceased his visits to your store? Can you think of a reason why he should cease buying your goods? If you cannot you should make it your business to find a reason.

The merchant himself or one of his clerks should take a day or two off some time and make a trip out through the country.

Every successful merchant knows that it is not half so hard to bring new customers to the store as it is to hold the regular trade. He should do all in his power to build up a big list of permanent customers.

One of the brightest sales managers in the country once said: "There is one man who knows a lot about your business and doesn't charge anything for imparting his knowledge. That fellow is the user of your article."

PHOTOGRAPH WINDOW DISPLAYS.

Every window trimmer who goes to the trouble of preparing a special display should have a photograph taken of it. Indeed it will pay every clerk devoting attention to window dressing to own a camera and learn how to use it.

What better recommendation, for instance, can a clerk have when applying for a situation than a few photos of good windows he has dressed; as a clerk having a knowledge of window trimming is recognized as one who must know the art of salesmanship pretty well.

Experience has proven that the best results can be obtained by photographing by electric light, provided the window is properly lighted, and making a long exposure gauged according to the power of the lens and the class or color of goods to be photographed. A window with sharp, distinct contrasts, or one containing light colored goods, does not need as long an exposure as a display of dark colored goods, or one without sharp contrasts of light and shade.

A fifteen-minute exposure is enough for the average well-lighted window. A poorly lighted window, or one containing dark merchandise, will require a longer exposure—twenty to thirty minutes is not unusual. During all this time the camera is exposed people can pass to and fro in front of the camera without spoiling the photograph, provided they do not stand in one place for any length of time.

Sometimes the top of the window is lighted much more strongly than the bottom of it, so that the photographs always come dark at the bottom. This can usually be avoided by placing two or three electric lights in the bottom of the window (extensions can be run from some of the sockets in the window), and so shielding them as not to shone directly into the camera. No light should shine directly into the camera.

It is well to remember that the window must be lighted more strongly than any objects across the street, otherwise these foreign objects will be reflected unless the screen is used.

A long exposure cannot be taken if there is even the faintest wind blowing, for the slightest shaking of the camera will blur the photograph.

Interior Arrangement with a View to Economy

Methods Used by St. John Grocers in Planning Their Stores—Give Much Prominence to Displays — Convenience Catered to in Construction of the Warehouse—Delivery System Preventing Goods Getting Wet.

Special Correspondence.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 2.—"St. John for its size has as fine a lot of retail grocery stores as can be found anywhere in Canada," remarked a wholesaler, who has recently been on a trip to Upper Canada, and the west.

"There are at least a dozen stores here that are equal to any I have seen anywhere. They are attractive looking, are cleanly kept and well stocked with staples and fancy goods."

These remarks set The Grocer correspondent thinking and suggested that perhaps there might be something in the arrangements and methods of dealers here that would interest those in other places. Several of the larger stores were visited therefor, and the result of the tour of inspection led to the belief that there was some foundation for the statement.

Three Large Show-windows.

The first store visited, situated on a corner in a prominent part of the city, has three large show-windows and three entrances—two for customers and one used solely for receiving and delivering goods. The windows, one between the two entrances of circular plate glass and the others, on either side are always neatly trimmed. In one was a display of canned, bottled and package goods. This window is boxed in with a glass partition at the rear. The other two are open, one being given over to a display of fruit, neatly shown in sections, and the other occupied with various kinds of breakfast foods, arranged in pyramids. It struck the visitor, however, that a few neat price tags would have been an improvement. The interior is neatly arranged with show cases, counters and tables piled with various edibles and around an iron post is an array of fruit syrups, maple syrup, bottled vinegar, etc., on circular shelves, reaching almost to the ceiling. A cash register is conveniently placed, and there are four counter scales and a platform scale. The office is at one side, enclosed with a glass partition and two telephones are installed, one in the office and one behind the main counter. At the rear is a cold storage room, or rather two rooms, for it is divided into two compartments, one used solely for butter and eggs and the other for fruits, smoked meats, etc. The back door, as it is termed, is located at one side of the building, and just inside the door is a freight elevator for taking goods to the basement or the warehouse on the second floor.

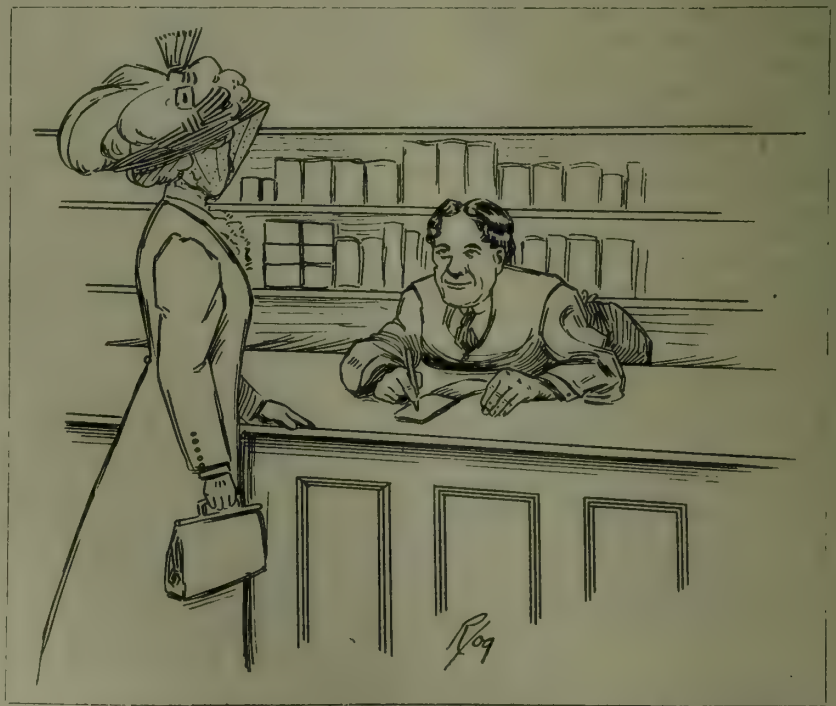
This section is partitioned off from the main store and in it are located the molasses hogsheads, oil tank, fish and pork barrels and other heavy goods, as well as delivery baskets, etc. From it also, doors lead to the cellar and warehouse. Everything is most conveniently arranged for catering to the wants of customers. The building is of brick, three stories high, and is all utilized for grocery purposes, except the top floor, which is a tenement. Two delivery teams are kept in use almost constantly.

Arrangement of the Office.

The next store visited was also built of brick, two stories high and used entirely for groceries, meat and fish. One entrance and three windows are devoted to the grocery department and another entrance with fish and meat display windows on either side, is used for that branch of the work. The interior of the grocery department is much the same as in the first mentioned, except for the post and its pyramid of bottles. A passageway leads from the grocery to the meat and fish department, and the office is located between the two with windows looking into both. The cash register is located therein, and a young lady cashier makes all the change. A telephone located near the passage serves for orders for both departments. Two delivery teams are kept at work here.

Construction of a Corner Store.

The third store visited was a "corner store," with three large windows on one street and one on the other, the entry being at the corner. The windows are shallow and do not require much stock to make an attractive showing, therefore they are changed often, which is a good feature. The fittings in this store are exceptionally neat and attractive. The floor is tiled, the ceiling is composed of glass panels, with marble effect, the woodwork being of cherry with recessed incandescent lamps in reflectors. The shelves are made of cherry-wood and in the centre of the store around a pillar is a square pyramid of shelving for fancy bottled goods. A cash register, up-to-date scales, meat cutters, silent salesmen, show cases and a telephone are among the fittings.



Two lady clerks beside the proprietor attend to the wants of customers and two delivery teams are provided.

At least a half dozen other stores of similar efficiency were visited. In one a covered courtyard at the rear of the store ensured all orders being kept perfectly dry in wet weather, as they are loaded on covered wagons before leaving the shelter.

Difference of Opinion.

It is a noticeable fact that few St. John grocers advertise in the local newspapers. Not more than two or three have a regular "ad." space and the great majority, large and small, never think of telling the public about their wares in the daily press. Asked why, they answer, "Oh, it don't pay." Many have never tried to see whether it paid or not, but seem to be content with doing what they can without such assistance.

One grocer who has a regular advertising space, was asked if he found it to be a benefit to his business, and he unhesitatingly replied that it was. When he received a new lot of goods, he said, he immediately noted that fact in his ad., and he could see the result in the many inquiries received. He admitted that he did not give his advertising as much attention as he should, and expressed the belief that he would have better results if he made changes more often.

Plenty of grocers all over Canada who are wide awake and up-to-date in other things, are woefully behind the times in advertising.

SUGAR MAN BECOMES BANK DIRECTOR.

Brief Resume of the Career of a Successful Business Man.

At a meeting of the directors of the Bank of Montreal, held November 2, Alfred Baumgarten, Montreal, was elected a director to take the place of the late A. T. Patterson. Mr. Baumgarten is president of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co., of Montreal, and is one of the most influential Germans in that city. He is also a large stockholder of the Bank of Montreal, holding some 1,800 shares, and has been viewed for some time as one of the next directors.

Mr. Baumgarten has long been a conspicuous figure in sugar circles, and his election only goes to show that he is appreciated in the financial arena as well.

A short resume of Mr. Baumgarten's earlier career will perhaps, give a better idea as to his mentality and intellectual equipment for the work.

A German by birth, he studied chemistry at the University of Gottingen, and afterward at the University of Berlin, taking the degree of Ph. D.

He then accepted a position as manager of a large sugar beet factory at Magdeburg.

A few years later he sailed for New York, where he founded the Laurel Hill Chemical Works. He then became interested in the American sugar industry. In 1873, he came to Montreal, taking the management of the De Castro Syrup Co.; in 1878 this concern was reorganized under its present name—the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co.—with himself as president. He has held this office ever since. Mr. Baumgarten is no longer a German subject, but a naturalized Canadian.

A. C. Beach & Co., general merchants, Cupar, Sask., are succeeded by Roberts Bros.

A bill providing that express companies and owners of moving vans must report to the Chief of Police all removals in the City of St. Louis, Mo., giving the old and new addresses of the families moving, will be offered in the St. Louis Municipal Assembly at an early date. The St. Louis Retail Grocers' Association, through its Legislative Committee, will ask the Real Estate Exchange and other organizations interested in keeping tab on people who may find it cheaper to move than pay debts, to send delegates to a conference to be held soon, at which the bill will be drafted and arrangements for having it introduced made. The law is to be framed after one in Nashville, Tenn., and other cities, where it has proved of great service to merchants, landlords and others.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—
Sugar—Probably higher.
Evaporated Apples—Higher.
Nutmegs—Probable advance.
Coffee—Easier.

Montreal, Nov. 4, 1909.

Sugar is firming up in the raw to such a degree that an advance is looked for at almost any minute. In fact, one refinery, the Federal, of New York, has raised prices. 5c already. It is expected that Montreal refiners will not be long in following suit.

The continued steady demand for molasses is attracting the notice of jobbers here. The cause is presumably the growing knowledge of its value as a food, combined with its economy.

Coffee in the primary market is not quite so firm, but no immediate change in present quotations is looked for.

The dried fruit season is well on now, and a second boat, the S. S. Jacona, is expected here within a week, with a full cargo of dried fruits and nuts.

Spices are still firm at present high quotations, with nutmegs in particular showing decided strength. In all probability they are due for an advance.

Canned vegetables are having a brisk sale, particularly peas and tomatoes. Fruits are somewhat slack, owing to the new dried goods on the market.

Lobsters are firm and will be sure to go higher in the near future, in fact, will be hard to obtain at any price. Salmon is firm with a fair sale.

Trade is generally good, as the jobbers are beginning to feel the effects of the approach of Christmas. Thanksgiving also had its share in bringing this about, and both wholesaler and retailer have felt the increase.

SUGAR — Reports from New York show a rise of 5c in refined, in the quotations of the Federal refinery. This has so far had no effect on local conditions, but it is thought that, owing to the strength of the raw market, and this condition in New York prices, a corresponding rise here is not far off. The retail demand for granulated is only fair, while jobbers are buying quite freely, in view of the present situation. Raws are firm and advancing.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES—The feature of the market is the continued steadiness of the demand for molasses of all grades. The value of this commodity as a food seems to be better recognized among the French Canadians than in any other section of the people. The staples of the habitant are fish, bread and molasses, with about an equal consumption of each. There are no changes in quotations.

DRIED FRUITS—Jobbers are already beginning to feel the effects of the Christmas demand. From present indications this year's trade will be a record-breaker for all lines.

TEA—The tea market is quiet, but remains in a healthy condition. There is only a small spot supply of visible tea, with little selling pressure. A normal and steadily advancing market is looked for by the trade. Values are somewhat higher than the corresponding season last year, which is causing the country dealer to hold off. The visible supply of Japans is small.

RICE AND TAPIOCA—Higher prices are expected in rice, though the market is already beginning to feel the usual Christmas demand for luxuries, and consequent falling off in staples. A shortening of visible supplies is the factor which is expected to produce this result, which would be somewhat astonishing at this time of year. No changes in either rice or tapioca prices have been made as yet since last week.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—There is already a considerable decrease shown in the sale of canned fruits since the arrival on the market of the new crop of dried goods. The demand for all lines of vegetables continues good, particularly peas and tomatoes.

The lobster situation shows no change from the conditions last week, the probability of a great dearth of supplies until next year being apparent.

Demand for salmon is good. Other lines of fish are quiet.

The scarcity of hog products is the cause assigned for the present stimulated demand for canned meats, as more are being sold than is usual at this time.

TORONTO.—The chief features of the canned goods market is the firmness of 3's and gallon pumpkins, which are scarce, and also the strength of the fruit market. Canned fruits are a little higher at the factory, generally speaking, but no increases are quoted by the wholesale trade. The pack of peas, as has been pointed out, is short and prices are strong.

For late run of sockeye salmon from $4.75 to $5 per case is offered f.o.b Vancouver, the quality being just fair. The first run brought about $6 on the same basis, large quantities of this going to supply the London market.

No change is observed in the canned lobster situation. Prices quoted last week are firm in view of the short pack.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Advance expected.

Raisins—Tendency to lower prices.

Currants—Weak market.

Celery Seed—Advanced

The Grocer has been complimented by the trade in general for the advice given to the retail trade last week under the Ontario markets, in reference to the proper distribution of the wealth of the abundant crops of our country.

The wholesale trade is satisfactory and jobbers all look forward to a healthy trade during the winter. Dried fruits are all in and are with a couple of exceptions turning out better than the first shipments indicated.

Syrups and molasses are in good demand and teas and coffees are steady. The easy feeling in tea a week ago has fully recovered, tapioca is firm and nuts are likely to be higher.

The sugar market should be carefully watched. Apparently it is on the eve of a rise following the advance in raws and also the advance made by one large New York refining company in refined.

SUGAR—An advance is expected at any time by brokers in the sugar market in Canada. Both raws and refined are advancing. During the past week one of the large New York refineries put up prices on refined sugar 10 cents on bags and 5 cents on barrels. With this situation confronting the market, we are liable to see higher prices in Canada in the near future. This tendency is largely attributable to the report of a short European beet crop, the decrease being estimated at 177,000 tons. The speculative interests, however, are making more out of the decrease and estimate it at a much greater figure—700,000 tons. Willet and Grey wonder why refined sugars haven't advanced, but say that jobbers are not excited over the situation and pursue their hand to mouth purchases. They also state that the total cane production this year will be some 371,000 tons greater than during the season of 1908-9.

DRIED FRUITS—Dried fruits are now practically all in, and after all that was said and feared, both quality and prices settled down to about the same level as last year. Orders which have been taken to arrive are now being filled, which causes considerable activity among the wholesale men. On the primary market, however, prunes, peaches and apricots are higher, with raisins and currants lower. The quality of the latter two dried fruits is not good. Currants have been spoiled by rain and the demand on first markets being light, prices are very low. Valencia raisins are not up to the usual standard in quality—they sugar too readily. Even lower prices are anticipated. Seeded Valencias are now becoming a factor on this market but the supply is yet small. They are the small raisins which are sifted through a sieve and which never contained any seeds.

TEA—The reported weakness in tea has again fully recovered and the market has resumed its usual firmness. There is a good supply of tea on the way of autumn Indians and Ceylons. The market in comparison with a few years ago is rather bare, but of course there is plenty of tea in existence to supply the demand. Hand to mouth buying has been the rule compared with other years.

Advances—Horseshoe salmon, dairy butter, fresh vegetables, eggs, pot barley.

Firmer—Apricots, nuts, evaporated apples.

Winnipeg, Nov. 4, 1909.

Last week dulness did not continue many days and an encouraging revival has taken place. Merchants have not been keeping up their stocks to meet the heavy demand. It is evident that dealers have not recognized the fact that the population of the country has so increased over that of one year ago, that it is necessary to order goods on a larger basis than before. Every community is larger this fall than one year ago and grocers must expect to see their stocks diminish more rapidly. The repeated orders for canned goods alone are very large and clearly illustrate the fact that these have been quickly consumed. Another evidence that stocks are moving rapidly is that collections are being made in a satisfactory way. Any superfluous cash that comes into the dealers' hands is forwarded for old standing accounts, if such there are.

Xmas goods are being ordered extensively now and this is another feature of the brighter trade. Wholesalers are almost cleaned out of shelled nuts and some lines of dried fruits and they are awaiting new arrivals in these lines.

The trade is really in an excellent condition and the general market is strong.

ST. JOHN MARKETS.

Corrected by Wire.

St. John, N. B., Nov. 4, 1909.

Lard and pork advanced again last week and stocks of both these staples are scarce and high. Ontario flour declined ten cents a barrel. In country produce turkeys are scarce and are bringing 23 cents a pound. Moosemeat and venison are fairly plentiful as are also woodcock and duck, etc. In the fruit market California oranges have advanced from $4 to $4.50 a box.

The sugar refinery proposition of F. C. Durant's is still in abeyance but it is thought a satisfactory agreement will be reached and that the industry will be established here.

The dates for the Dominion exhibition to be held here next year have been decided on. It will open on Labor Day, Sept. 5 and close on Wednesday, Sept. 14.

HALIFAX MARKETS.

Corrected by Wire.

Halifax, November, 4, 1909.

Halifax grocers report trade brisk, and the prospects are that it will continue so until the close of the year. The retail business this season has been good, the cheapness of fruit largely increasing the sales. The Halifax dealers have handled a large quantity of Ontario fruit this fall, much more than ever before. Grapes were imported in car loads and they found a ready sale. The prices were so low that it was no trouble for the jobbers to sell the stock. When a car load was consigned to a commission house the jobbers bought large lots, some of them taking as many as one thousand baskets. Eight pound baskets sold at retail for twenty-five cents. Grapes were never sold as cheaply here before. The imports of peaches were also much heavier than ever before. The choicest stock in large baskets sold for one dollar. All this fruit arrived here in first-class condition. The crop of Nova Scotia peaches was about over when the Ontario stock arrived and therefore it met with little or no competition. Heretofore the quantity of Ontario fruit imported here was limited.

The price of pork continues to soar and another advance is noted. American clear fat backs are now quoted at $31.99, the highest price ever recorded on this market. Even with these record prices the dealers would not be surprised if pork was quoted still higher. The supply of fresh pork coming on the local market so far this season is limited, and for the best of it they are paying from ten to eleven cents per pound. All pork products are correspondingly high in price.

Prince Edward Island produce is now coming in quite freely. The quality of the potatoes is good, and the larger arrivals have caused a drop in the price. They are now selling at forty cents per bushel. Within the next week or so a further decline is expected.

BIG CROP OF CRANBERRIES.

Crop reports from the cranberry fields in the United States show that there will be no possible excuse this year for any lack of sauce to go with the turkey, says the New York Commercial. Massachusetts reports 269,107 bushels, a gain of 32 per cent. over last year's yield. New Jersey has 192,612 bushels in sight, 80 per cent. more than last season, and Long Island and Wisconsin report big crops.

The total estimated crop for the entire cranberry field is 1,675,000 bushels.

NEW SOAP FACTORY.

The United Soap Company, which was forced by the Brantford, Ont., city council to cease operations there, is rebuilding a modern soap establishment in Maisonneuve, Montreal. The cost is estimated at $50,000.

Thirty-five million barrels, or 12,000,000 barrels more than in 1908, is the estimated apple crop of the United States and Canada this season, according to Ben H. Rice, secretary-manager of the second U. S. national apple show in Spokane, to be held from Nov. 15 to 20.

Alarming Growth of Cream Exportation to U. S.

Cheese Factories on the Border Closing Down — In Quebec 15 Factories are Sending Their Total Output of Cream Across the Border—Butter Men Want to See Heavier Export Duty to Offset the Situation.

In a recent issue of The Grocer, attention was called to the exportation of cream to the United States. Since the issue the growth of this business has been such that it is alarming the butter dealers of this country who are cognizant of the facts, particularly as the price of butter in the States is rising instead of going down, as might be expected.

Reports have been secured by The Grocer, from reliable sources all along the border, from Michigan to Vermont, and everywhere it is the same. Farmers who live near the line are driving cream across in as large quantities as they can obtain. Most of the butter and cheese factories within fifty miles of the border have almost ceased operations, owing to the fact that larger profits are made both by themselves and farmers by exporting cream.

Cheese factories in the Brockville section have ceased operations in order to sell their cream in Ogdensburg. The same is true of Bright, Strathallen, Innerkip and Hamilton sections, with the difference that the shipments are made to Buffalo and Rochester. Some eastern shipments have gone to Boston, consigned to candy and confectionery establishments, presumably for the manufacture of candy and ice cream. Detroit is also getting large supplies from the Chatham district. Canadian Government statistics show that, in the Province of Quebec alone, fifteen creameries are exporting their total output of cream to the United States.

American Buyers Here.

A new development of the situation is the fact that American buyers are in Canada at the present time picking up all the cream available. Woodstock and Stratford districts are being "worked" principally just at present.

From one small U.S. customs district, Memphremagog, 9,000 gallons of separator cream were brought in from Canada, since the new tariff went into effect there, August 5, 1909. This act imposes a duty of only 5c per gallon on cream, and makes no specification as to what test this applies. As a result, the export cream is separated until it is very largely pure butter fat, testing usually over 45. This reduces the duty to a merely nominal amount. The duty on butter itself, being very high (six cents per pound), it can readily be seen what an immense difference it makes as to what form the cream is taken over in.

Another district has shipped through one port of entry during the present month over 30,000 gallons of cream, and the amount is growing daily. Some of the towns from which this is shipped are Sutton, Cowansville, Knowlton, Roxton, Valcourt, Eastman, West Shefford, St. Pie, and Dunham.

This serious condition of affairs is rapidly becoming a problem for the Government to take up. It is a national question, one worthy of some customs' legislation. Exporters cannot be blamed for taking advantage of the situation to improve their profits. United States butter is now selling about 5c per pound higher than is butter in this country. The price of butter here in winter is always high enough, without the additional amount which it is expected will be asked this coming winter, owing to the scarcity of cream.

In talking with some of the representative butter men in Montreal, the only remedy suggested was an export duty on cream, sufficient to offset the additional profit in the States. It seems the only feasible plan to meet the present growing menace to our butter supply.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Hints to the Trade Supplied by Sellers.

A recent advertisement which has aroused considerable favorable comment in the grocery, as well as in the advertising world, is that new poster of the N. K. Fairbank Company, which depicts their famous twins seated on an aeroplane, making progress through space. Underneath is the inscription, "The 'Right' Brothers for Your Cleaning." The poster idea is well thought out and is so opportune as to reflect great credit on the originator of the ad. and the company executing it.

White Swan Spices & Cereals, Limited, are putting up a most attractive square sample tin of "White Swan coffee," which they are sending direct to the best residents in Toronto and outside places. The sale for this coffee has enormously increased of late and it is the intention of the company to thus create a further demand among those who have not used it thus far. This will, doubtless, turn a lot of high-class trade to the retail grocers.

Two additional electric weighing and packing machines have been installed at the Red Rose Tea plant at St. John, N. B. Even then, and with a staff working every other night, it has been found difficult to keep up with orders.

VALUE OF GOOD COPY

Personally, I believe "ads." in trade papers should be made so attractive, so interesting in some way that the merchant as he glances through the trade journal will stop and see what you have to say. The simple announcement that you are in business is not enough. I don't care how prominent a firm is, they should not get the idea they are so big that all they need to do is to reproduce their name on a page in a trade journal and say nothing more. They should do something to make the merchant curious; in fact, somewhat anxious to meet the travelling man you are sending out to represent you.

Canadian Cheese Prices are Likely to Go Higher

New Zealand Make, Not What Was Anticipated — Much Cream Being Exported to United States—Plenty of Butter on Hand in Cold Storage—New Laid Eggs Very Scarce—Advance in Compound Lards.

The pork packers are more inclined to accept the hog situation as it is, and are not expecting more than the country can furnish. They have abandoned the idea of getting enough hogs to keep their factories running to their full capacities, and are content when they are able to supply their local trade. Hogs are steady at $7.15 for live weight at country points, and the demand for cured meats is active without any change in prices.

The butter situation becomes a puzzling problem. That the bulk of our packed butter is held in cold storage cannot be disputed, and the question that is confronting the holders is, where to find a market for it. While waiting for the English market to come our way, it is alarmingly disappointing to see the immense quantities of Australian fresh grass butter taking advantage of the English market at a figure which is not quite high enough to suit our dealers here. It is quite true that the low duty on cream, takes a lot of our butter to the United States in the shape of cream, but the high duty stands in the way for our butter finding sale there. The high price of butter on the other side of the line is also a conundrum, upon which a theory might be ventured. Some of the producers of oleomargarine in the United States, have far more interest in the production of that article, on which they can make a profit only known to themselves and guessed by others, and it is suspected that these large concerns are bulling the butter market in order to realize the fancy prices for their oleomargarine. Even if they have to sell at a loss, when the market breaks, they no doubt have made it many times over in the high price of their product.

The cheese market looks better, and a good deal is changing hands at a slight advance. With so many countries now competing for the English market, our dealers are beginning to realize that the risk of holding is much greater than it used to be. There is no doubt that for the good of the cheese industry the price opened too high in the spring, and was held above the value for the great markets of the world, which caused it to be difficult to move. There is not much New Zealand cheese in sight, so that prices of Canadian cheese may advance.

The unusually high price of eggs and its outcome is also causing some good and hard thinking. Strictly new laid eggs at this time of the year are almost out of the question, and with a bait of 35c a dozen, many a usually honest person is tempted to sell eggs which had been held for the genuine article. The quantity of cold storage eggs, however, is large, and with the high price in sight, the farmer will do a lot of earnest coaxing with his hens, and if the weather will not be too severe eggs may come within easier reach before the winter is over.

PROVISIONS — All compound lards are up ½ cent, owing to a sudden increase in demand. Heavy flank pork is now quoted at $32, a raise of $4. Scarcity is the only explanation brought forward.

BUTTER—The main feature of the butter situation is the anxiety of the best posted men regarding our winter supply, owing to the sure cream shortage under existing conditions. At present, due to an oversupply, no immediate effect has been observed resulting from the increased exportation other than a decided firmness in the market. That it is beginning to affect receipts is shown by the statistics for the season, which show a decrease of 31,505 packages as compared with last year.

For the week receipts are 6,043 packages as against 5,697 packages same week last year. For the season they are 339,258 packages, as against 370,763 packages same season 1908.

CHEESE — From present indications the New Zealand cheese crop is not going to be such a menace to prices as was at first expected. English prices are now the equivalent of ¼ to ½ cent higher than last week, and a further rise is looked for. There seems to be no doubt that the conservative policy pursued by British importers has resulted in a lower range of values than might have been expected, as cheese is growing into favor more and more as an article of food.

Prices here are expected to be higher in the near future, owing to the increased demand, both foreign and domestic, especially as receipts are falling off. The receipts for the week are 46,003 boxes, as against 55,335 boxes, and for the season 1,796,280 boxes, as against 1,764,735 boxes same season 1908.

EGGS—Receipts of eggs are almost nothing this week and from all indications there is no immediate prospect of any great increase. Dealers are having troubles in obtaining sufficient for present needs of new-laid. It looks decidedly like higher prices, though no changes have been made as yet.

Receipts for the week are 1,663 cases, as against 3,527 cases same week last year. For the season they are 180,346 cases, as against 179,638 cases same season 1908.

PROVISIONS—The local markets are firm and active. Demand is good and prices are well maintained. Dressed hogs are selling at $10.75, and are all wanted as they come in. EGGS—Strictly new laid eggs are hard to get hold of. This, however, is what usually happens at this time of the year. November and December are the hardest months of the year to get hens to do their work. They need new clothing for the cold winter and they usually devote these two months for that purpose and a rest. With the high price of eggs in his mind the farmer is apt to show special kindness to his hens, and provide them with extra hot meals at all hours.

POULTRY—With all that has been said and written about the poor condition of a large percentage of the poultry that comes to this market, there seems to be little improvement. If farmers would discuss at their "Farmers' Clubs" how to get their stuff in better and more respectable conditions on the market, they would derive more benefit and credit than to be planning how they can make a few cents by clubbing together to buy certain things, and take away what rightfully belongs to their own merchants. Tons of poultry come to this market which cannot possibly pay for the cost of raising them, but which would net a good profit if they had been wisely prepared for the market.

THE CHICAGO 'SLUM' GROCER.

Geo. H. Tanner.

The slum grocer, having his store in an eight by ten foot basement, is the busiest man in Chicago. He is busy avoiding kicks and knocks from customers, from the health department, and from many other sources. If the kicks slow up occasionally, he gets busy planning how to get out of his basement storeroom and secure better and more spacious quarters for his little business. Most probably he is figuring on getting out of the grocery business altogether, or at least out of the slum part of it.

For no sort of occupation is so tiring and disconcerting as keeping a little grocery in some dingy and moist basement in the Ghetto or in any other congested district. The hours of work are from four o'clock in the morning until ten o'clock at night. But this is not the only drawback of the small slum storekeeper. There are other more painful situations which confront him.

Perhaps the worst of these is the necessity of keeping the store clean and the goods fresh. Both of these are things which the basement grocer simply cannot do, at least not well. He has no facilities for keeping his place clean and has no trade large enough to allow his goods to circulate quickly and to get in a new stock of goods every other week or so.

There are hundreds of little stores in Chicago where the keeper of the store has only one room back of his store to live in. As the proprietor of such a store has one and generally more children, the insufficiency of the "home" is apparent. So the family encroaches on the business premises and the home and store become one.

Frequently upon entering such a store one will find some of the family wash drying in the rear of the little room. Children crawl about the floor, playing with the measures, the scoops, or whatever else they can lay their hands upon. The woman, the wife of the storekeeper, who acts as saleswoman while he is away, and frequently while he is there, too, has her babe in her arms or lap. When a customer comes in she puts down the baby and is ready to wait on him.

Drop in Wheat gives Weaker Tendency to Flour

Weather Conditions in England Interfered With Harvest—Decline in Price of Oats—No Changes in Manufactured Goods Prices.

The wheat markets all over show considerable weakness. The surprise of the world is the enormous yield which in almost all cases, with the exception perhaps of England alone, is far in excess of the most liberal estimates. Russia is still pouring out its yield, which is altogether beyond what was expected. Canada and the United States are doing the same thing. The Chicago receipts exceed last year's so far by over 3½ million bushels. With all the efforts made to boost the price or even to maintain it, the great quantity has a bearish influence, and in spite of the fact that farmers are holding back, the tendency is for lower prices.

If the gambling feature were taken out of the situation, there is no doubt, calculating from the standpoint of supply, that prices would recede from their present position.

The weather condition in England interfered much with the havesting of the crop there, and the quality is greatly damaged. This may strengthen the feeling and cause an active demand from abroad, but they will not pay us fancy prices if they can get it cheaper from other sources.

The oat market is also easier in most quarters, and a slight concession would lead to active trade. Prices of oats in Winnipeg have declined, and are now selling from 33 to 34c a bushel.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR — Flour is steady at last quotations. The usual situation at this time of the year prevails among the farmers, who are holding back their wheat for the higher prices expected. This is causing a somewhat uncertain condition among millers, who are for the above reason unable to offer flour freely. Pastry flours are somewhat higher in the primary markets, and all lines are firm.

FLOUR—The Toronto millers are paying $1.08 for Ontario winter wheat at their mills. The same price has now been paid for several weeks. Manitoba wheat is worth three cents a bushel less. Since the advance of 20c a barrel last week, prices have remained unchanged, and the indications are that it will not go any higher, but rather turn donward.

CO-OPERATIVE STORE FOR NELSON.

How Merchants Killed the Proposal to Establish One in Vancouver.

Vancouver, Nov. 2.—Nelson, B.C., is to have a co-operative store in the near future, a decision to that effect having been reached at a recent meeting of the miners' union there. A subscription list will be opened at once, and as soon as $5,000 is subscribed, a store will be opened. The par value of shares when issued will be $25, payable at the rate of $5 monthly, no subscriber being allowed to take stock over the value of $100.

A number of co-operative stores are in operation in the province, those on the coast being at New Westminster and Chilliwack. A couple of years ago an attempt was made to organize one in Vancouver, but when the subject was mooted the storekeepers, who had been giving credit, said they would press for the payment of what was owing them by anyone who subscribed for stock. After their debts were clear, then they would be at liberty to do what they pleased. The grocers did not see why their debtors should put what spare money they had into an opposition concern. It was found that the grocers were carrying people to such a large extent that the co-operative project had to be dropped.

MUST "NEW ORLEANS" GO?

Move to Strike the Name off all But the Best Molasses.

The Federal Food and Drug Board of the United States in inquiring into the question of "New Orleans Molasses," and may rule that only the best grades of the Louisiana product can be called "New Orleans." The department's object is to deny the right to use the term with any Louisiana molasses except the original, old-fashioned, open kettle molasses. In other words, it will permit the use of the designation New Orleans molasses, as formerly, but will make a ruling confining it to open kettle goods. If this ruling is made, and stands, all the lower grades of Louisiana molasses, known as centrifugals, will have to be called Louisiana molasses, or something other than "New Orleans."

The National Molasses Refiners' Association has gone into the matter, and has filed with the Federal Board a brief contending that its members should be permitted to use the phrase with all grades of Louisiana molasses, as now. The outcome will be watched with interest.

Between the Quality Lover and the Bargain Hunter

IN THE last analysis, Brother Grocer, what is it Mistres Housewife really wants when she says "flour"?
Must be something more than just so many pounds of wheat product in exchange for so much good Canadian coin.
To her, "flour" is only a relative term. What she exacts is the raw material essential to baking success.
She sees beyond her purchase; she doesn't really want cheap stuff; but she demands so many wholesome, nutritious, well-piled loaves from her barrel of flour, and appetizing pastry in plenty. That is the true meaning of "flour"—to her.

* * * *

To the sensible home maker (and the number is not decreasing) initial cost is of absolutely no consequence, since between FIVE ROSES and the poorest makeshift the difference is barely half a cent a pound.
Believe us, Brother Grocer, no woman deliberately buys poor flour: she thinks it's good.
No woman likes to mumble apologies when hubby throws in her teeth (figuratively) the "pies mother used to make."
Half a cent saved is poor economy in the face of soul-vexing discomfiture.

* * * *

The buyer must trust to the honesty of the seller, his knowlede of her needs and the best manner of supplying them. and she believes YOU when you say FIVE ROSES will help her establish a cooking reputation, which next to the children is her greatest concern.
You say it because you know it to be true.

* * * *

What if you do lose a sale once in a while to a cheaper flour competitor?
Isn't the quality lover worth three bargain hunters?

Dosn't the customer find out for herself soon enough who actually pays the difference in kitchen worries?
If, to teach her the fallacy of flour economy, somebody must disappoint her the first time—
Let the "other fellow" do the teaching, Brother Grocer.
You have lost one sale—true; but he has lost a customer.
His art is to get the housewife's dollar, yours to get her confidence.
Let him pride himself on his business acumen (?)
May his pipe dream never fade.

* * * *

There is no method of making friends equal to the method of "making good."
Which explains why FIVE ROSES is a friendly flour.
The more you look into it the more you'll wonder why you've waited so long to take hold of a "success brand."
It will profit YOU in more ways than one, for the housewife who buys FIVE ROSES may not stop at flour.
Take this home, Brother Grocer, and "try it on your piano player." Always remembering that]"To-morrow has cost many a man a fortune.

How Specializing Bears with it a Reputation

A Westerner's Ideas in Centreing on Some Particular Article and Stocking Only the Best—A Specialist With a Good Name Will Draw Custom in the Face of Much Competition—Study Customers From a Scientific Basis.

By R. Bruce Bennett.

"I believe a grocer should always make a specialty of some one thing," remarked a successful Vancouver dealer the other day. "It has been amply demonstrated that specialism pays, and wherever it can be successfully worked it should not be neglected."

At first thought, one would wonder how a grocer could specialize, having to keep a stock of so many different articles, but it must be remembered that any man who specializes in any one line, knows something of a good many other lines besides. It was explained that a dealer should establish a name for some one thing. Let it be said that "Johnson always has the particular thing in a specific line that is wanted," and it is remarkable how much other trade follows.

Carries a Reputation.

One sees in large city stores which deal only in butter and eggs, grocers keeping only the very best, and they manage to do a good business in these exclusive lines. A grocer may have others than the best, according to the kind wanted, but how many groceries are there in large centres where absolutely good eggs can be secured all through the winter, say eggs that when boiled will suit the most particular taste? They are obtainable, for people get them. The grocer that allows a leak in his trade will be surprised and pained to find how rapidly it grows in size. And it works the other way, too. If a person comes to the store only for one particular thing, he will soon realize that if a man is thoroughly painstaking enough to go the trouble—for often it means considerable—to get what is the best, he has a general idea of what is required, and for that reason alone is worthy of more business.

Make a Study of Customers.

While butter and eggs are quoted, they are the first things that suggest themselves. Again comes in the point which good grocers always emphasize, namely, study your customers. One's store may be located in a section where some one thing would obtain a good sale. It should not take very long for a wide-awake man to find out what it is, and when he finds it out let no other grocer have better than he, either in quality or quantity. A man with a trade or profession at his fingers' ends can generally get located in a job, and the dealer, no matter in what business he is, who specializes will find trade coming his way.

In Vancouver, with Chinamen market gardeners taking truck from door to door in wagons and in shoulder baskets, one would wonder how a grocer could make a success of specializing in green goods. Yet there is at least one. There is a good deal of truth in the words of the popular song, "I want what I want when I want it." When a housewife arranges the day's dinner, she can do so with the certainty that she can lay her hands on what she requires in H——'s grocery just as sure as if it were in her larder. The Chinamen may have failed her once, or he does not call daily, and moreover often his calls are unexpected. She cannot think on the spur of the moment what she needs. It is when she wants it that she wants it badly. It saves keeping things in the house, for with the assurance that it is always fresh and available she will not trouble. And human nature is prone to leave the trouble to someone else, even if it costs a little extra.

PERSONAL NOTES.

A. N. Whitman, of Halifax, was in Montreal last Saturday.

G. R. Small, of the Canada Maple Exchange, Montreal, was in Ottawa last week.

Col. A. E. Labelle, Montreal manager of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Ltd., has returned from an enjoyable hunting trip in the north, with a party of friends.

H. G. Connors, of A. H. Brittain & Co., Montreal, is back to work again, after his operation, but his friends in the trade will not have a chance to welcome him for a few weeks, as he is still unable to get around freely.

The many friends of Geo. F. Campbell, traveler for Blue Ribbon tea, among the merchants in western and northern Ontario will regret to learn that he will not be able to call on them for some weeks. On his return from his northern trip he was taken with a severe illness that will prevent him from work for at least six weeks.

T. Primeau & Co., Chatham, Ont., are opening a grocery in the store at the corner of St. Clair Street and Grand Avenue, formerly occupied by Richard Reaume. The new firm comprises Thos. Primeau, for some time past associated with various Chatham dry goods firms, and his brother, W. F. Primeau, of Pain Court. The latter has been a member of the Pain Court grocery business of Primeau & Bourdeau, which has just been dissolved, Geo. W. Bordeau continuing the business.

GREEN FRUITS—Early varieties of apples are becoming scarce and prices are correspondingly high. A few of the late varieties have made their appearance, but not sufficient to judge as to the grade yet. The market is dull throughout, but it is expected to recover shortly. No important changes in price are reported. Lemons are still $3, and in New York $5, in spite of the general expectation that they would be higher here in sympathy with the United States market.

FISH—Stormy weather on the coast curtailed receipts of fresh haddock and fresh cod, also haddies and bloaters, but it is expected that the supply will improve soon. Kippers are scarce. plenty of frozen halibut and salmon are now in transit, and will be ready for delivery this week. Green cod market is improving as orders from the country are coming in fairly well. Bulk and shell oysters are in good demand, with prices firm and supply ample.

GREEN FRUITS—The business at the fruit market is closed for the season and the fruit men are all back to their respective homes

A few of the tail ends of the season's fall fruit are still on hand. Only a few lines of late peaches are offered, which sell slowly at 50c a basket. Grapes are doing well and are here yet in abundance, selling as low as 12c a small basket. Apples are receiving more attention, but very little of good winter stock has so far been offered. Snows are the present favorite and sell as high as $4 a barrel for choice select fruit.

The first car of Florida oranges has arrived. The quality is excellent, and the color "golden." New lemons are expected to arrive this week, which are expected to be a little cheaper than the old stock. Almeria grapes are selling from $5.50 to $6.50, and are looking upwards.

Cranberries are firm and while some were selling a week ago at $8, they are now hard to get at that price.

VEGETABLES—Potatoes are turning out a great crop and are arriving in large quantities. They are of exceptionally good qualities and quite free from rot. They are selling from 60 to 65c a bag delivered to stores. Sweet potatoes are arriving freely and are selling at $3.50 a barrel double head. From the results of an experiment in growing sweet potatoes in the neighborhood of Chatham, it is likely that in course of a few years large quantities will be grown in that part of the province. Common vegetables are nearly all supplied by gardeners direct to stores, and therefore not many are handled by commission men.

TO GROW GRAPES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 2.—It may be only a few years before the grape which has made Niagara famous will be grown extensively in British Columbia. It has been found that the climate and soil in this province is admirably adapted to the culture of this luscious fruit, and that there is a demand for it has been shown in the rapid sale of a carload lot which was placed on the market here last week. There are many people here who came from the east and know the Niagara grape, consequently it requires no introduction. F. H. Latimer, of Penticton, grew some very fine specimens at his residence this year, and his success has raised the query why it is not grown more extensively. Thomas Earl, the veteran resident of the province at Lytton, has grown grapes for several years and has met with more than usual success, demonstrating that no great difficulties stand in the way.

ALL BUT ONE.

The Toronto wholesale fruit men have deserted the fruit market, and were all this week to be found at their own places of business — no "my good George" they were not all there, as the chief of one of the houses was this week engaged in a transaction other than looking after the buying and selling of fruit. Particulars of it appear elsewhere.

TRADE NOTES.

The A. E. McKenzie Co., Brandon, Man., are preparing to erect a large wholesale house in that city to replace the one destroyed by fire about one year ago. The building will be seven stories high, and will cost about $60.000.

The fish commission appointed by the Dominion Government, was in session at Winnipegosis, Man., recently. Considerable valuable information in the interest of this fish question was obtained by the commission from some of the oldest fishermen and fish dealers of the country. The question "would it be advisable to stop the export of fish from Canada to the United States?" was discussed. Some thought that the Canadian market could not use anything like the supply furnished. The question of opening the lake for summer fishing was taken up but was not concluded.

Mr. Grocer! Look at the Situation as it exists

The credit customer is a valuable asset—IF HE PAYS. Right there is the vital point. He MUST pay, or YOU lose—he must be made to pay without being offended—or, again, YOU lose. There is one sure, safe, satisfactory way—the

Allison COUPON BOOK SYSTEM

HOW THEY WORK

A man wants credit. You think he is good. Give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book. Have him sign the receipt or note form in the front of the book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10 — No trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10 and gets another book. No pass books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes.

The LATEST "Enterprise" Electric Mill

New ideas applied to rapid grinding of coffee by electric power make these new "Enterprise" Pedestal Mills by far the best on the market to-day. They are Direct Connected. They lose no power in transmission. The grinders are on the motor shaft. The double Mill shown here, No. 0852, is for alternating current; can also be furnished for direct current. One Mill is fitted with tooth grinders which cut the coffee, the other mill fitted with ribbed grinders for pulverizing. Each hopper holds six pounds. The Mill will granulate 3 pounds of coffee per minute, and pulverize ½ pound per minute. The cans or receivers are enclosed as a protection against dust. The Mill is self-cleaning. This compact, graceful 1 H.P. Mill is already in great demand. We invite correspondence and will send facts, illustrations and prices of our 45 sizes and styles of Rapid Grinding and Pulverizing Mills on request.

We supply grocers also with Meat and Food Choppers, Self-Measuring Pumps and Faucets, Smoked Beef Shavers and other "Enterprise" Specialties. You should have our latest catalogue. If you haven't it, write.

Tom Murray is a Canadian who has advertised himself into one of the most successful retail businesses in Chicago. He states how he is influenced in his buying by trade paper advertising.

"I take a number of trade papers and read them from cover to cover to get the news of the various branches that constitute my stock. And that's one of the ways that I learn about the manufacturers whose salesmen come to sell me a little bill of goods.

"If the manufacturer's advertisements have impressed me his salesman gets a careful hearing, for I want to know more of the story that trade paper 'ad' started to tell.

"Of course I believe in advertising—I do a bit of it myself. I wanted the people of Chicago to know that Tom Murray sells men's clothes, and if I've succeeded it's because I advertise.

Tom Murray

"Anyhow, whether or not it's because I, myself, am an advertiser, I certainly feel that the manufacturer or jobber who advertises is showing signs of life, and he also shows that he is polite enough to tell me about his goods when I have the time to listen.

"May be I make a mistake, but we buy goods from firms who have a reputation, firms we have heard about, firms we know about, firms that advertise.

"When a firm advertises in trade journals nowadays they are getting in good company. As I pick up any one of a dozen of these periodicals here in my office and glance through them, I find that the wise people, the successful firms, are advertising in these trade journals. I call advertising in trade journals 'getting in good society in a business way.'"

Will the retail grocers think more or less of your house and your goods if they see that you are interested enough in their business to ask for it when they have the time to listen—when they sit down to read The Canadian Grocer?

Will your travelers get a better or a worse reception because the house they represent occupies a space in that medium, the appearance in the advertising columns of which the retailer regards as a manufacturer or wholesaler's outward sign of progressiveness?

You don't have to puzzle over the answer.

Read next week about the firm that could not be unknown or forgotten.

FRIENDS—NOT GROWLERS

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes never comes back to you with growls from the housekeeper. It is always up to the same high standard maintained for forty years, and it is always just right. That's why we have the thousands upon thousands of grocers pushing it everywhere. Grocers don't wish to run the risk of losing a good customer by passing out an inferior stove polish, which is wrong more often than it is right. RISING SUN makes friends for you and for us in every household where you put it.

Talking to the Point

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS get right down to the point at issue. If you want something, say so in a few well-chosen words. Readers like that sort of straight-from-the-shoulder-talk, and that is the reason why condensed ads are so productive of the best kind of results.

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS are always noticed. They are read by wide-awake, intelligent grocers, who are on the look-out for favorable opportunities to fill their requirements.

Currants
Of High Repute

Aside from their high quality, the evenness of the packing is a feature that will appeal instantly in currants shipped by

THE GREEK CURRANT COMPANY

Fine, selected, high grade in every respect and well deserving of the place they occupy in the front rank of popular estimation. The Greek Currant Co. has a reputation to conserve and that's why their product never varies.

Fruits
Dried or Canned

The "Griffin" Brand of dried and other fruits established the standard of quality from which all other brands are judged, years and years ago. Comparisons are made from the "Griffin" Brand.

GRIFFIN & SKELLEY

Their seeded and seedless Raisins, Canned Fruits, white and green Asparagus, Sterilized Prunes, Cured Fruits, are steady sellers to the most particular people—people who make a hobby out of "Quality." Best because no others are quite so good.

Gelatine
The Best There Is

Cox's Gelatine (in powdered form) is as staple as sugar, tea or salt. It is as safe to stock up with as sugar, tea or salt. No other gelatine claims superiority, because it involves wasted effort so to do.

COX'S

It is the absolutely pure gelatine. It never disappoints the cook. It never fails to accomplish the desired and expected result. And it maintains its unsullied reputation for quality steadily year in and year out.

OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND

Canned Fruit and Vegetables

Your Success

is best attained by care in the selection of your stock of goods. The ability to choose between articles that move rapidly and those that hang fire as it were---that pile up "dead stock."

Now, you know what makes goods move quickly. Advertising---to create the initial demand. Quality---to make them repeat. More advertising---to convince additional consumers and to suggest new uses.

Pure Gold

(Trade Mark Registered)

are getting the advertising---you've seen the copy in the Canadian newspapers, magazines and street cars. You will continue to see it.

They have the quality---the purity, deliciousness and wholesomeness to bring repeat order after repeat order. This has been proved for years---before we even thought of advertising them.

Do You Carry the Pure Gold Line?

(Trade Mark Registered)

If not, it will pay you to do so---there's a profit for you.

These goods can be had of all jobbers and can be shipped from Pure Gold stocks at Victoria, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Montreal, Toronto and Calgary.

Will Merchants Be Represented at Farmers' Clubs?

Proposal to Bring About This Situation Meets With Favor From Government Official—Chief Object Will be to Prove to the Farmer the Financial Benefits of Dealing at Home—Other Questions That Might be Considered to Mutual Advantage.

The question has often arisen, how are the merchants going to educate farmers to co-operate with them in the building up of a community and hence mutually aiding each other from a financial standpoint?

Merchants know that they have not the co-operation from the farmers that they desire, and that they should have. They know that great numbers of the farming community around their places of business are sending past them to catalogue houses for goods; they are conscious of the fact that if they were in a position to carry on an educational campaign, pointing out the evil effects of such methods in plain dollars and cents that the mail-order situation would be alleviated.

If there were a proper medium in which to conduct such a campaign, as well as to deal with other questions, such as the proper attention to eggs, butter, etc., that have to pass through the hands of the merchants to the consumers, many of the troubles in the trade would be eliminated.

Those who are acquainted with the methods of farmers appreciate the value of Farmers' Clubs and Institutes. Through this medium they secure a great portion of their education. Then, why not use it to bring about the desired changes that are necessary to enhancing the wealth, value and standing of the community. The question is, how can it be done?

Bring Matter Before Institutes.

The Canadian Grocer recently talked over the situation with Geo. A. Putnam, superintendent of Farmers' Institutes for Ontario, and suggested the idea of having representative merchants or other interested speakers, address the Farmers' Institutes on trade questions—this to be done with a view to better co-operation between farmer and merchant, tending to the strengthening of the community and to the placing of more dollars and cents into the pockets of both.

The proposel met with the favor of the dairy instructor. He had not looked at the matter in that light, but stated that he would consider the question, and in all probability, the Retail Merchants' Association will be given an opportunity to present their case before the farmers regularly at Farmers', and possibly Women's, Institutes and Clubs.

The merchants, however, should not be inclined to work on sentimental lines in their talks to farmers. One simple, plain fact stated concisely, showing a farmer, or for that matter, any other person, how he can make $10 or how he can increase the value of his farm, is worth more than an all-night's talk catering to his sentiments.

Plain Money Talks Needed.

It will not be sufficient to say to a farmer that he must not buy from the mail order house because it is not fair for him to purchase goods past his own merchants. It is necessary that he be shown that he can buy goods cheaper at home than he can from the catalogue houses, and that he is actually losing money through mail order purchases When it touches his pocket then he begins to listen and reflect.

The farmer must be made to see that the value of his land is enhanced, according as his home town grows. If he is positively assured that his land increases in value in direct proportion to the standing of the nearest village, town or city, and that it means direct money to him if he buys his goods at home, then he will certainly do so.

On the other hand, if he is told that the mail order house—which is considered as a legitimate institution—can sell more cheaply than the home merchant, but that the home merchant should get the business on general principles, then the effect of the whole argument is lost. Dollars and cents count, practically, every time, and the situation must be faced on this basis. It has been demonstrated from time to time that merchants in country districts can undersell the catalogue houses. Specific instances illustrating this are necessary in order to talk to the farmers so that the talk will be convincing.

While the mail order problem is one of the most important that could be discussed at Farmers' Institutes, there are other questions that could well be handled to mutual advantage.

Marketing Farm Products.

It is a fact well known, for instance, that the marketing of butter, eggs and poultry could be improved upon. Eggs are often allowed to remain in the farm houses for days and even weeks in the hot summer-time, when they should have been marketed. The merchant who handles them has to bear the complaints of the consumer, while in reality the farmer is to blame, in all probability, unconsciously. But the farmer must be shown how he is losing money by selling stale eggs before he will correct the error. Only then will he make an effort to sell fresh eggs. The merchant knows what he has to contend with in selling to the consumer and the better the quality of eggs and butter, the better will be the demand and, therefore, the more money will be paid to the farmer. Stale eggs will certainly not tend to create a demand for eggs and the more there are, the fewer will be the eggs consumed.

These are but a few of the questions that might suggest themselves were the Retail Merchants' Associations given the privilege of having speakers attend the gatherings of the farmers. Much education could be accomplished on the catalogue house question, because the arguments against it could be made so convincing that farmers would be compelled to listen. It could be easily shown, that, while one mail order purchaser couldn't injure the community very much, scores would do considerable harm by sending their wealth away from the place, in the success of which they are directly interested. It simply means, as before pointed out, that the importance of their home towns and villages are lessened, and hence the value of their own farms decrease. Money talks, and they will have to be approached on no other basis.

Specific instances can easily be shown where land values have decreased simply because the home-town merchants were overlooked. Villages and towns go to pieces and land purchasers are difficult to find.

How Merchants Can Assist.

Of course, merchants themselves are to blame for many of such conditions. Live merchants who constantly boom their businesses and who work together can hold the trade of the surrounding community. Some years ago this was demonstrated out west in a small town just after a large mail order institution was established in Winnipeg. The merchants united, formed a joint-stock company, and made a specialty store out of each general store then established. One specialized on groceries, another on dry gods, etc., etc., and every business was run on the latest, up-to-date methods. The result was that little or no money went past this small town to the catalogue institution—because the townspeople and farmers were satisfied with what they were getting at home.

However, education among the farmers is needed, and, as Mr. Putnam intimates, there seems to be no better method than by bringing it about through the Institute meetings.

Cuba's output of sugar for 1908 has been placed at almost 1,000,000 tons, while statistics of this year's exportations and production up to March 1st indicate a crop for the season of 1,400,000 tons. There are said to be 186 plantations in operation.

Interior of the Adams Bros. Grocery Store, Lindsay, Ont., one of the Most Successful Retail Stores in That Town, the Business of Which has Been Built up on Quality Goods.

Practical Methods Used in Retail Grocery Stores

The Value of Giving Exact Weight—Moose Jaw Merchant's Idea on Clean Windows—A Close Watcher of Would-be Delinquents—Advice on Displaying Profitable Goods—Why Clerks Should Read.

Advises Clerks to Read.

Charlottetown, P.E.I., Nov. 9.—Every grocer should be enthusiastic over the education of his salesmen and salesladies. It is the duty of all to assist them in every way possible, as a Charlottetown grocer is doing. He sees that his salesmen read good trade literature and hands them over The Canadian Grocer as soon as he has finished with it. He thoroughly believes in an education on trade subjects, and whenever he has the opportunity he takes up such questions with his salesmen, in what might be termed a "miniature convention."

To encourage them in their work he frequently adopts their suggestions in his business methods.

"Cleanser" Displays.

Chatham, Nov. 10.—There are a number of good cleansers on the market which can be used for cleaning glass, metal articles, etc. Here is a window design which takes but small space and yet clinches the point most effectively. It can be used for one of those little "corner" windows where there are only a few inches of space each way.

Pile boxes or cakes of the cleanser in the bottom of the window. Then take a metallic article of some kind—a kettle is a good thing—and clean a portion of it till the metal glistens. Put it that way, half cleaned, in the window. Put price tickets on the preparation; also an advertising card with catchy wording, as, for instance. "—— will finish this in five seconds," or, "It feels good to be cleaned with ——"

The half-cleaned kettle is a better advertisement than one entirely cleaned. The contrast makes the work of the cleanser much more effective.

Keep the Windows Clean.

Moose Jaw, Sask., Nov. 9.—Many particular people measure a grocer's importance by his appearance and that of the store. To cater to this class, therefore, the first requirement is to have clean windows. While it is seldom a purchaser will mention it, she usually notices whether the windows are clean or not. If they are, she will likely take it for granted that the interior is similarly treated.

A Moose Jaw grocer has definite ideas along this line. "I know it brings trade," he says, "and our entire store is as clean as the windows."

Specializes on Quality.

Calgary, Nov. 9.—"Too many grocers remember only present profits, when the future is what should be looked at first. If this is kept in mind when buying, poor stock will not attract, even if it is a fraction cheaper. Make quality your first consideration, and it will not be long before you can charge prices which will look fully as well as any profits you could have made from the cheaper goods."

The above are the sentiments of a Calgary merchant who specializes on quality goods.

Give Full Weight—No More.

Montreal, Nov. 10.—There is no necessity to do what so many grocers do, give the customer the benefit in weight every time. Have your scales accurate and give full weight—no more. It is not appreciated, and in the end will tell considerably in the total year's profits. "Sell as much as possible by weight," is the advice of a Montreal grocer. "It is much easier to figure a fair selling price if you have bought by weight, and divide that weight into your selling price for the lot. You are then sure of your profit, provided you do not allow your customers more than a fair deal."

Small Loss Through Delinquents.

Dartmouth, N.S., Nov. 9.—"Deadbeats" are watched as a cat does a mouse by Forsyth, Jr., of Dartmouth.

"My probable loss," he recently said, "is not more than 1 per cent., and my actual loss is not over a ½ per cent."

He meant that figuring his loss through delinquents at the end of the year, it could not be more than 1 per cent., taking everything into consideration. Later, of course, he is able to collect a portion of what he first counted a loss, so as to let his actual loss down to about one-half per cent.

Mr. Forsyth does not think that he could run his business on a strictly cash basis, in view of the fact that Dartmouth is chiefly a manufacturing centre. He knows practically everyone, and as the population doesn't change much he can easily keep tab on all his customers.

As an advertiser in the local newspaper, Mr, Forsyth is among the leaders. Reproductions of his ads. have frequently appeared in The Canadian Grocer as models. He stands by advertising as one of his most successful methods, and attributes his survival in the business field to his publicity campaigns.

Would Display Profitable Goods.

Victoria, B.C., Nov. 8.—A specialty salesman, in discussing the displaying of goods with a Grocer correspondent to-day, said that the way goods were displayed by the average grocer was a great mistake.

"If I were running a store," he said, "I would make most conspicuous in my store, both in my windows and on my shelves, the goods which I most desired to sell, having, as far as possible, goods of every kind on my shelves which I knew to be of good quality, but which invariably paid me a fair profit. Then I would put all, or nearly all, the goods which did not pay me a fair margin of profit on some shelves under the counter, where customers would not see them. I would strive mighty hard to build up a reputation for the quality of goods, and to do that might sell a few goods of unusual quality at low prices in order to get them known to my trade, increasing the price later.

"I would never put article after article on my shelves without regard to whether they paid me a profit or not, the way many grocers do. I would look upon my shelves and windows as so much advertising space, to be used for advertising goods which I thought is paid me to advertise. In my newspaper and circular advertising I would pursue the same policy, booming goods which might be unknown to the public, with the exception of two or three leaders which I might put in to attract attention."

This quoting exceedingly low prices on two or three widely-known articles does not cost as much money as one would think. The writer knows a grocer who advertised a three-days' sale, making prominent mention of a widely-advertised cereal, which he quoted at seven cents, regular price, ten cents. His circulars brought a big crowd to the store and did business, but only three persons asked for a package of that cereal. As he lost two cents on each of those three packages, his actual loss on that article was just six cents.

Meat Department a Good Investment.

Midland, November 11.—S. F. L. McMurtry, of this town, has added to his grocery store a meat department, which he claims is a good investment. He is already doing a good trade in this line.

A Traveler's Advice.

Montreal, Nov. 10.—"The peddler system, both in Ontario and Quebec, is one of the evils of the grocery business," remarked a grocery traveler recently. "The great advantage they have over the man in the store is that they save the customer the trouble of going down-town to order. Peddlers cannot give the same grade of goods for the same price as the reputable grocer, so adulterated goods creep in. Take individual care of your trade. See that your customers know what they are getting if they buy from a peddler. If necessary, compare samples, and show them how inferior a brand of goods they are buying.

"Just an anecdote to explain something else. A Montreal grocer, now retired, was waiting on a lady who wanted tea. She informed him that she knew all about tea of every kind, and didn't want him to try and 'palm off' a poor brand on her. She was shown a brand of 50c tea, which was a good one for the price. 'Her nose went up,' so to speak, with the remark that if that was the best he had, she would go elsewhere. The grocer didn't even hesitate. He went to the bin and brought out another sample of the same tea. 'Of course, madam,' said he, 'I have a more expensive tea, but I was not sure of the price you wished to pay.' He got 60c for that pound of tea. Now, that may be dishonest, but it seemed to fit the old byeword, 'It served her right.' Incidentally, the grocer had no 60c tea, and would have lost the sale.

"Just a word or two in general," remarked the knight of the grip. "Neatness in the store, and tactful clerks, even if you have to pay more for them than your competitor, are essential to your business success. Organize your business as if it were a small army with an enemy in sight. The more perfect the organization the better and quicker the results. By giving each clerk some incentive to push his own line, you add to the efficiency of your force. Be sure your mathematics are right,—that is, buying and selling prices and overhead expenses. It needs a live man to successfully handle a retail grocery in the face of modern competition."

OLD CANADIAN STORES.

The above is a reproduction of a photograph of an old store at Islington, Ont. It is owned by J. Dunn, of that place, and was built away back in the year 1840—sixty-nine years ago. This is the fourth 'old store' in the series.

Grocery Methods Conducing to Success

Galt and Woodstock Grocers Express opinions on Betterment of Business Methods—Hard Work, Determination, Frank Honesty Make Satisfied Customers— System to secure Prompt Payments Necessary—Old Ideas Prevail at Woodstock—Grocer Who Pays to Have His Goods Delivered—Wanted, an Association—Still Giving Premiums — Troubled With "Bad Pays"—Discouragements of Credit Business.

Galt, Nov. 10.—A visit to this pushing manufacturing town convinces one that here the merchants are an aggressive set of men. They are in the forefront of every good movement, and the grocers are among the leading men. Some of the methods which have made their names known among Galtonians have also made their businesses successful.

"I attribute my success in business to hard work," said one of the town's most prominent grocers. "I always had the idea that if anything needed to be done, there was a way to do it. With this in my mind I would adapt my methods to accomplish whatever I aimed at, and with determined hard work I would invariably get there. I always was of the firm opinion that nothing could succeed if it was not built on honest facts, and this I have completely demonstrated throughout my business career.

"Frank honesty under all conditions and circumstances is essentially necessary in order to be successful as a retail merchant. Where a man has to meet from day to day such a variety of human opinions, and all classes of people and their needs and wants, he will soon get himself tangled up, unless he stands firmly on the ground that will carry him safely through all difficulties, and that is frank honesty and truthfulness. I would rather see a customer go out of the store well pleased with the way she was waited on, even if she did not buy anything, than if she had bought a big bill of goods, some of which would not please her when she got them home. It is a foolish mistake to urge people to buy goods in order to get rid of them, or merely to make the sale.

"It used to be considered clever and good salesmanship to sell goods, which people did not want, and through this mistake all merchants were more or less regarded with suspicion. A merchant must buy his goods, both in quality and kind, so that he feels proud to show them to his customers, and at the same time know that they will give satisfaction."

"I have just finished painting my store red," said another Galt grocer. "This is my third day in business, and I have therefore not much to say. I have had a three months' rest and time to study the best methods of doing business, which I intend to put into practice."

"The Canadian Grocer is a very valuable paper," remarked a third grocer, "and I read it regularly each week, always finding something that will help me. I wish The Grocer would rake over the whole country and find out some system by which we could secure more prompt payments of our accounts, and that would get our customers to pay up in full instead of so much on account, always leaving a balance to be carried forward. I am using a new system of bookkeeping, which shows to the customers their total indebtedness with each bill, but even that does not overcome the difficulty. If the retail merchants would keep up a live organation, they could clean out every objectionable feature in the trade."

"I think all the grocers should apprecite your vist," said another. "It shows that The Canadian Grocer makes an effort to assist the grocery trade. The paper is all right."

All the Galt grocers report business as quite satisfactory, and they are looking for still better things later on. Farmers are yet busy on their land, but their crops were good, and prices of almost everything they have to sell are high. This should give them a good selling season this winter.

Woodstock, Nov. 11. — The grocery stores in Woodstock run above the general average, and their owners are all well satisfied with their fall trade.

The small, "every-street-corner shops" are not in style here; and, therefore, the grocers are not suffering from troublesome opposition. Most of the grocers have been in business a long time and have established customs of their own, and no power could move them from these well beaten tracks. One, especially, hangs on to his old ideas, which landed for him a fortune, but which are almost in every respect out of date. The people are so accustomed to his old-fashion ways, that any change would likely cause a disturbance among his many old customers. He has a fish box, extending about four feet out on the sidewalk, which is there now and which has been there both day and night and Sundays too, so long that its claims of possession cannot be interfered with by all the powers of the city. That box contains ice and fish all the time, which are protected at night by a strong lock.

With exception of a few such peculiarities, which are found in every town, Woodstock grocery stores rank above the average found in towns of its size. The stores are well kept, and the people are so well served that comparatively few seek better things through mail-order houses, away from their own good city. To unload the burden of looking after delivery boys, horses, wagons, etc., one grocer pays a certain amount, to a carter to deliver his goods. This man must deliver everything to the satisfaction of the grocer, and the grocer has no bother after the goods pass into his care. This is a plan worth considering by others, for all grocers know what it is to manage delivery boys.

The stores are well arranged, with good-sized warehouse in the rear, where goods are received, unpacked and checked, and from which the salesrooms are constantly replenished.

One grocer remarked that the business of the town could be improved very much if the merchants would combine for the general good of the trade, but it seems that merchants have not yet learned the advantages that might thus be derived. "When the facts are understood in this respect," said this grocer, "there is no excuse for any town to be without an association. Where there is no organization there is strife and enmity. This would disappear if they would meet from time to time in friendly fellowship, and no one would suffer through it. We want more moral courage, we should quit worrying about the other fellow; and we should make an honest, fearless determined effort in favor of fair dealing, and in the interest of Woodstock."

Another grocer gave vent to his feelings by saying that "some of our merchants have not yet risen above the deceptive habit of giving premiums, or rebates. The whole commercial world is fighting this evil, but still some will persist in hanging on to this delusion."

"We have considerable trouble," said another, "with bad pays, and I think we have to blame ourselves for being too easy. I think all retail merchants should have a form to be filled out by applicants for credit, showing where they are employed; the salary received; where they dealt last, etc. This could easily be done if the merchants were organized."

"I am tired of the credit business," remarked still another grocer, "particularly on account of the endless work in keeping books, making out accounts, etc." This grocer copies every item from the check books into a day book, and from this again into the ledger, and when the bills are made out, every item has to appear again on them. Why all this unnecessary trouble? It is all in educating the customers, and no merchant would be expected to do it, if the customers understood the work it takes to do it, without being of any use to them.

The Randall Grape Juice Co., Grimsby, capitalized at $40,000, has been granted an Ontario charter to deal in fruits and to manufacture fruit juices and their products. The provisional directors are: John W. Smith, Jos. Tweddle, H. L. Roberts, A. W. Smith, Alb. N. Zimmerman, W. F. A. Wilson, Grimsby, and Fred N. Randall, Ripley, N.Y.

COMMENT ON NEW SUGAR REFINERIES.

Some Figures Given on the Daily Consumption of Sugar in Canada.

Commenting on the news item which appeared in a recent issue of The Canadian Grocer in reference to the formation of three new sugar refining companies in Canada, a writer in the Montreal Gazette, who signs himself "Mercator," deals with conditions which, in his estimation, must be met. He says that "we have on the carpet at the moment a proposed refinery in St. John, N.B., at Toronto another, at Chatham a third, and at Vancouver a fourth.

"It is generally known, in this city at any rate, that those already in operation, some five in number, are not fully employed, and the Government return of the consumption, which in 1908-9 was less than 5,000 barrels a day for the whole Dominion, is not more than enough to keep one first-class refinery fully occupied. In Hailfax we have two (one silent). In Moncton there was one, burnt, but not rebuilt; there are two in Montreal and one in Vancouver.

"Needless to say, those now projected can only succeed by silencing those now in existence. The consumption of the whole Dominion is, as said, less than 5,000 barrels a day, and of this the St. John project is modestly proposing to supply 3,000 barrels. Its first business, therefore, will be to silence, not only those now in existence, and some of the new ones projected, and this undertaking will certainly operate in the postponement of dividends all around.

"Any one can check my figures from the Government Trade and Navigation Returns for the fiscal year to end of March, 1909, page 266."

SELLING GROCERIES BY WEIGHT.

In Illinois, U.S.A., there is a state law giving power to any city council to pass an ordinance providing that vegetables and other dry groceries shall be sold by weight, instead of by measure.

Referring to this plan, the state journal, representing the Aurora retail dealers, says:

"Such action will do justice to both the dealer and the consumer. It is an indisputable fact that many items in the grocery line cannot be measured by the same party with the same measure twice in succession and give the same exact measurement each time. One bushel may contain twelve pounds, another fifteen, another eighteen, and the same variation may take place in making smaller measurements. The items also of parsnips, sweet potatoes, turnips and so on, are susceptible to variation in measurement. This applies to the purchase by the retailer as well as serving the customer; therefore, as a question of equity the use of weight in place of measure should be observed.

"Then again, selling by weight in place of measure will go a long way toward solving some of the unpleasant features of competition by the street peddler or hawker. It is generally accepted that there are two reasons why the street peddler can undersell a regularly established dealer. In the first place he usually buys refuse stock, that is, he makes his purchases after the regular dealers have made their selections, the rejected stock being bought by him and hawked about the streets. Another reason is that the average street peddler has a faculty of measuring six pecks out of a bushel, which enables him to sell at cost price, yet make a good margin of profit by giving short measure. An act of this kind will compel him to buy by weight, thus placing him more on an equality with that of the regularly established dealer.

"Here now, is an item with which associations can busy themselves to secure the needed legislation through their municipal governments. If each association will take this matter up, it will be a comparatively short time until selling by weight in place of measure will be in practice throughout the state."

HONOR FOR PRESIDENT OF BOVRIL.

The Earl of Arran has been appointed by the King to be a Knight of the Order of St. Patrick, in the place of the Earl of Carysfort, deceased. The Earl of Arran, the sixth bearer of the title, having succeeded his father in 1901. The new Knight of St. Patrick, president of Bovril Limited, was formerly adjutant and brevet major Royal Horse Guards. He served in the Egyptian cavalry, and commanded the Royal Horse Guards squadron of the Household Cavalry in the South African campaign.

LARGE RICE CROPS IN JAPAN.

The Japan rice crop is reported to be the largest for some time and with the return of good rice crops good times are being experienced. Yet from figures furnished it is shown that Japan imports about seven times as much rice as she exports. Her tea crop is also reported good and expected to help out the export trade. The Jiji, a leading paper of Tokio, had an item recently wherein it was stated a subsidy would be granted to the Shidzuka tea men. This will raise the standard of Japanese teas and help advertise them.

LARGE INCREASE IN P. E. I. DAIRY PRODUCTS.

St. John, Nov. 10.—Harvey Mitchell, of the dairy division, Ottawa, was in the city last week on his return from a visit to P. E. Island. He reports that there will be a large increase in dairy products from P. E. Island this year. Nova Scotia has gone in more for the establishment of private dairies, and although New Brunswick has co-operative dairies, there is little, if any, increase to be noted in their output this year. Mr. Mitchell said that all crops have been excellent on the island. The farmers there saved their hay before the wet weather set in. He saw a good deal of grain in the shock, however, and fields practically under water. Potatoes are a good crop but are rotting as the farmers cannot get them out of the ground.

H. Bradbeer & Co., who have been in the grocery business in Lethbridge, Alta., for the past two years, has sold to Geo. Kerr, for many years connected with the Hudson Bay Co. The change took place on Nov. 1st.

OUTLOOK FOR CANNED GOODS.

A careful reading of this week's grocery markets in the various centres of Canada leads one to believe that higher prices will soon rule the canned goods situation. Especially is this true of vegetable lines.

From all sections of the country reports reach us that the tendency is towards higher values. In fact, Ontario markets already show an advance of 2½ cents per dozen. A slight one, to be sure, but, nevertheless, a movement showing the way of the wind. This advance takes in beans, corn, peas, pumpkins, tomatoes among the vegetables, and berries, peaches, cherries, plums, pears and apples among the fruits.

Winnipeg reports a decline in canned berries, but this is the only weak point in the situation. With it all, too, independent canners are said to be low in supplies, which fact of itself should tend to make for higher prices.

At present canned goods look safe to hold, and, happily, the trade is said to be fairly well supplied.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SALMON IN LONDON.

After five years of persistent effort, the sending of fresh British Columbia salmon direct to England will soon be an accomplished fact. Discouragements have been frequent, and the scheme has been laughed at several times, but now it seems a certainty that the first consignment of fifty tons will be shipped in the near future, direct from the Pacific coast to London.

Heretofore all shipments have comprised frozen fish only, but, in case this initial lot arrives in first-class condition, it is likely most future shipments will be sent fresh.

According to the promoter of the scheme, all that is necessary for success is to chill the fish properly. If successful, it points the way to the development of a new outlet for Canadian salmon; and, in fact, for other lines of fish. Canadian fish have no superiors among fresh varieties, and it looks as if we would soon be in a position to take our share of the English market. It will mark the beginning of a new era in fish exportation.

MONTREAL TO ITALY DIRECT.

Many years have been spent by prominent Italians in this country, as well as exporters and importers, to accomplish a scheme of sending cargoes direct from Montreal to Italian ports.

The first results of value obtained were the establishment of a line of two fruit boats, the Jacona and Bellona, sailing at certain seasons from Italian and Spanish ports direct to Montreal. This was not by any means what was wanted, though it was undoubtedly a step in the right direction. Efforts were continued, with the result that the Thomson Line have assigned the new S. S. Tortona to the Italian route, to sail direct between Naples and Montreal. At present, of course, the service is somewhat of an experiment, but there seems no reasonable doubt in the minds of those conversant with the situation, that traffic will not only warrant one boat, but, in the course of time, more boats will have to be added.

With the French line again subsidized by the Federal government, and this new line to Italy, Montreal is rapidly getting the best of direct transportation facilities with the principal European ports.

TAKE TIME TO READ.

"I have no time to read." This is an expression familiar to trade paper canvassers, and if it were as well understood by those who make use of it, as it is by canvassers it would not so frequently be expressed. Instead of being an excuse for not subscribing for a paper that will benefit the merchant, it is an admission of neglect to do what every business man is expected to do.

Trade papers are busily engaged in searching for new and progressive ideas, and are bringing the best that can be found to the attention of their readers who are continually making use of them.

A young man recently bought out a grocery business of which he has little knowledge. He has not the least inclination to read and therefore has little chance to learn. He is consequently not making headway and cannot understand what is the matter.

Another young man started under similar conditions, but he caught on to the idea that knowledge is the source of success. He devotes certain hours every week to the reading of trade literature, and he claims that his success, to a large extent, is due to the valuable information he obtains in that way. If a man has no taste for reading he should cultivate it; in fact should make himself read, and he will soon acquire a habit that will be beneficial to him. The man who does not read must not forget that others read him, and they soon find out that he is narrow in his views and selfish in his dealings.

It is even time well spent for a grocer to take a look at other stores in order to get improved ideas, but what is that compared with the knowledge he can gather from his trade paper, which is on the lookout for the best systems and methods all over the world, and which are gathered up and brought right to his counter every week for his own benefit and at his leisure.

No time to read! One might as well say that he had no time to eat.

MAKE YOUR COLLECTIONS NOW.

This year's harvest has been a bountiful one. The farmers have money, and that means that there is money in circulation through all the channels of business.

Now is the time for the merchant to collect what is due for merchandise supplied on account. There are many demands upon the farmer and the laborer for his money after the harvest and if the merchant is to secure what is rightfully due him he must go after his money and see that he gets it.

Every merchant should get his credit accounts checked and posted up to date without delay. If he has notes on account due, he should present them for payment and insist upon a settlement. If he has merely outstanding credit accounts on his books, now is the time for him to see that his collections are made.

KNOW THY GOODS.

The Canadian Grocer has for some time been calling the attention of grocers and their clerks to the importance of knowing more about the goods they are selling, and still some allow their clerks to go on from week to week without making an effort to improve their knowledge of the goods they are expected to handle. That this idea is appreciated is evident for the fact that a grocer writes: "The fundamental principle of salesmanship is to know your goods."

It is impossible to make a success of selling any article unless you can talk intelligently about it. The people are looking for it, and the customers are expecting the services of qualified salesmen to handle the goods they buy to eat.

Evaporated Apples.—New stock in.
Canned Goods.—Rise looked for.

Montreal, Nov. 11, 1909.

About five days ago it looked as if sugar was due for an advance. In fact one New York refinery did make a five cent advance, but during the last few days, indications seem to point the other way. The recent Cuban hurricane did not damage crops to any such degree as was anticipated.

Investigations show that damage was done to a very small proportion of the total crop. This fact, taken in conjunction with the gradual drawing off of American refiners, who have now about filled their requirements, promises an easier time to the market.

There is a largely increased demand for molasses, owing to dealers being anxious to fill requirements before the close of navigation. A few low grade tea arrivals have injected temporary life into the tea situation, but no high grade teas are at present on the importers' hands. Low grades of coffee show great firmness, but no price changes are expected.

The arrival of the S.S. Jacona has about ended the dried fruit season, and at the same time given a new impetus to nut trade. This year's crop seems to be fully up to last year's standards, and most of the Jacona's cargo has already been sold.

Tapioca is easier while rice is considerably firmer. Spices are still firm, with a probability that peppers and nutmegs will go higher in the near future. Flax is now so high that farmers are getting 3c. for it in the fields. Beans are down to 1.85, owing to the large supplies now coming forward.

Two cars of new evaporated apples have been delivered here, and the grade is pronounced very good. Canners have raised prices in most lines of their goods. Gallon apples are up 25c. While this has not as yet affected local conditions, it seems sure to do so in the near future, as prices are too near cost at present.

SUGAR.—Advices from Cuba show that there is a strong raw market, but this is not expected to last. The cane was not damaged by recent storms as much as was at first stated, and stocks will, therefore, be larger than anticipated.

American refiners have now about withdrawn from the market, having filled their requirements. This will assist in lowering the raw market.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.—Dealers are anticipating the closing of navigation by laying in stocks of molasses, as freight by boat is so much less than rail. This has caused a largely increased demand for this commodity.

Corn syrups are quiet, though there are symptoms of an increased business in the near future. Prices are unchanged.

The Shanghai market is virtually closed for the season. The stock of China teas is short and prices are considerably higher than at this time last year. Local demand is chiefly for Japans.

BEANS AND PEAS—Supplies of beans are coming forward in large quantities, and the price has sagged somewhat under the pressure. Peas are having a steady sale at last week's quotations and no change is expected at present.

EVAPORATED APPLES — Two cars of new winter stock have been delivered this week and more are coming forward. The demand is very brisk, both for new goods and the early fall apples already on the market. The price for the latter ranges around 9c.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL — Canners have raised on all lines, especially on gallon apples, which are 25c higher. This has given the market a firmer feeling all through, and dealers expect a rise in the near future, as wholesale grocers have been selling very near cost, and will grasp at this opportunity to raise prices.

No changes have been made as yet, however.

TORONTO.—Canned goods are firm, but the trade is fairly well supplied and in the meantime the turnover is limited. The independent canners are all pretty well sold out, and when the repeat orders are required by the retailer it is quite likely that they will have to pay more for them. The Canadian canners advanced the prices of all their goods this week 2½ cents per dozen; gallon apples 25c., and 3 lb. apples 5c. per dozen. With the possible heavy requirements in the Northwest, canned goods at the present prices are considered safe to hold.

Toronto, Nov. 11, 1909.

The wholesale trade is experiencing a certain amount of the usual quietness after the first rush of the arrival of the fall goods. However, the general feeling is satisfactory, with even better things to come. The general tone of the trade is optimistic and cheerful, with good reports for all country points.

SUGAR—The prices of raw sugars are uneasy and more or less fluctuating, but the refined article remains unmoved, and while the market is firm, no change is looked for, at least, in the immediate future.

COFFEE—A peculiar feature in the coffee trade is the high price of Rio coffee, which is now only a fraction of a cent lower than some varieties of Santos, which is considered a much better quality. This must mean that some people will not accept the growing tendency to put Rio on an inferior list, and will continue to have coffee that has a flavor.

TEA—In consequence of the continued firmness of the tea market, several of the package tea firms have advanced their lower grades 1 cent a lb., which means that much less profit to the retailer.

DRIED FRUITS—The orders which had been taken for future delivery are now filled, and a large portion of the goods are in the hands of the retailers. No material change is expected in these lines, and prices are well maintained, with the exception of large size prunes, which are smaller percentage than last year. ST. JOHN MARKETS.

St. John, Nov. 10 '09.

A number of changes have been listed in quotations since last report, mainly as a result of an adjustment by the price committee of the Maritime Grocers' Guild. There has been a good deal of dissatisfaction among jobbers lately over the persistent price-cutting of several wholesalers. One prominent dealer said he was getting letters every day from his travelers telling of having met with lower quotations from other dealers while his own prices were already as low as was possible to quote and leave a fair margin.

If the present state of affairs continues there is likely to be a merry war on soon when retaliatory methods are adopted.

HALIFAX MARKETS

Halifax November 6.

The steamer Jacona which arrived here this week from Mediterranean ports brought an immense cargo of dried fruits for Canadian consumption. The steamer had twenty-four thousand boxes of currants, raisins, citrons, almonds and hazel nuts. She also brought a few casks of wine. There is in all about fifteen hundred tons of these delicacies aboard, a large portion of which is for Quebec, Montreal and Toronto. The steamer landed a considerable quantity here which will be distributed over the maritime provinces. Some of the fruit opened up is of very fine quality.

The autumn trade at present is fully up to the standard of last season. Some Canadian pork is now coming on the market and it will have the effect of relieving the price of the American product. The supply of lard is very limited and high prices prevail. Easier conditions are looked for in the near future. Trade conditions are considered very good and the collections are much more satisfactory. Produce is now coming on the market in good supply and the commission houses are doing a good business.

The apple trade is very brisk and the shipments continue heavy. The steamer Gulf of Venice that sailed from here this week for Liverpool took 21,000 barrels. She also had among her cargo a very choice selection of Nova Scotia apples which are being sent to England for exhibition purposes. It has been the custom in former years to send apples to the Royal Horticultural Exhibition. This will not be done this year, but the apples will be sent to the different county shows instead. These apples are packed in boxes as well as in barrels, and the stock is of very fine quality, being large and highly colored. The apples were collected from the finest orchards in the province.

American plate beef dropped one dollar per barrel here this week and is now quoted at $16.50. United Empire sugar was advanced ten cents per hundred pounds and fancy Barbadoes molasses (puncheons), declined one cent per gallon. Fresh laid eggs are becoming very scarce and the best stock is now quoted at 30 cents per dozen. Higher prices are looked for.

INFORMATION FOR BUYERS.

Hints to the Trade Supplied by Sellers.

It is interesting to learn from J. H. Vavasseur & Co., Ltd., of Lloyd's Avenue, London, England, that they were the first to manufacture desiccated coconut in the island of Ceylon. They established their factory there in 1890, nearly twenty years ago.

A report comes from Fresno, California, U.S.A., that the California raisin crop has been cornered by L. F. Giffin & Co. Watt & Scott, Toronto, are the agents for the Giffin Co., and W. H. Escott will represent them in Winnipeg.

There is probably not one man in a hundred thousand that could tell you how many grocers there are in Canada. The "Salada" Tea Co. have compiled a statement showing that on January 1, 1909, there were 27,573 grocers in the Dominion. The company's system of distribution has been so perfected that 19,238 are selling "Salada". The effects of persistent and consistent advertising are thus shown, which, when backed by unvarying good quality, makes "Salada" a tea that every grocer can recommend with absolute confidence.

The Christmas season being so near, the announcement of Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, elsewhere in this issue, will be of particular interest to grocers desirous of securing supplies at attractive prices. Dried fruits and nuts are featured, and it is safe to say that no firm is in a position to offer a wider range of goods at more attractive figures than they are quoting. Prunes, figs, evaporated fruits, raisins of all kinds, currants, shelled and unshelled nuts, are all included in their offerings. Grocers will do well to await the coming of the firm's traveler, or to otherwise secure information about the goods offering before making their Christmas purchases.

DETAILS OF THE CHRISTMAS CONTESTS.

The Canadian Grocer in recent issues announced the beginning of our annual Christmas window dressing and retail advertising competition which closes on December 31st. This is done with a view to encouraging a greater interest in holiday displays and holiday advertising. If both are performed in the proper manner they will be found to be of much selling value to merchants.

Following last year's precedent, window dressing contestants will be divided into two classes:

For the best selling window display shown in (1) a city over 10,000 population, and (2) in towns and villages under 10,000 population.

In the window display contest in each case there will be two prizes as follows: 1st, $7 in cash; 2nd, $3 in cash, making in all $20.

To enter the contest send a good, clear photo of one or more Christmas windows, with a description and the name of the person who arranged the display. Photos must be mailed to us not later than December 31.

Most grocers use increased newspaper space during the Christmas season with a view to booming holiday trade. We want to get copies of these advertisements.

The advertisement submitted should be about Christmas goods sold through grocery stores. All that is necessary is to forward one or more clippings from your local paper to us, with the name of the writer of the advertisement, and the name of the paper it was clipped from. There will be a prize of $5 cash given to the winner.

The award will be made by an advertising specialist and will be announced, with a reproduction of the prize ad., shortly after the close of the contest. All entries in each case should be mailed not later than December 31 to the Editor of The Canadian Grocer.

A Buying Power of $210,000,000

The merchants who read The Canadian Grocer every week represent a buying power conservatively estimated at $210,000,000. In their purchases they are always disposed to give the preference to Grocer advertisers. There are good reasons why this should be so. Figure out for yourself if it is worth an advertiser's while to occupy this position of advantage, when, by the use of a half-page space, he is able to talk to 10 good buyers for every cent expended. In other words, every cent he spends gives him prestige with a buying power of $300,000.

Basis of Business Growth

On a food stuff window in Toronto is emblazoned in display letters,

"Our Motto, Quality Sells"

Sometimes you have been almost persuaded that price sells; but you know, and it is part of your business faith, that quality sells and more than that, that quality, as Mr. Sheldon, editor of Business Philosopher and Salesmanship, says, "Quality begets confidence and confidence begets trade, builds it up and keeps it up."

It is because of the quality of Red Rose Tea that I keep telling you that it will pay you to recommend it to your customers. The quality of Red Rose Tea is so good that when you recommend it you are building up you customers' confidence in you and in your store. It is the quality of Red Rose Tea that has been the basis of its wonderful business growth. It is to-day the very best value on the market. That means:

It will pay you to recommend

Red Rose Tea

Your tea business will grow.

MANITOBA MARKETS

Corrected by Telegraph.

Advances—Almonds, 3 and 4 crown muscatels and California raisins evaporated apples, peas.

Reductions—Beans, canned fruits, Rolled oats.

New Goods—Figs.

Winnipeg, November 11, 1909.

The trade has been weakened somewhat by the delay in the arrival of supplies. Orders have been coming in freely for several weeks for dried fruits which could not be supplied. Several cars arrived yesterday, about 18 days later than the arrivals last year; this applies to the Mediterranean fruits particularly; the California goods were about 10 days later than usual. Xmas goods are moving very well and the season promises to be an excellent one for holiday lines.

The market is fluctuating freely this week. Some important advances have been made, and although we quote reductions in beans and canned fruits the market is on the whole growing stronger. The consumption has exceeded the supply to such an extent that prices have been forced up. With the incoming of new goods the tone will be steadier and it is thought that prices have about reached the maximum in several lines. The trade is in good condition, but it would be greatly improved if collections were better.

October was a record month in point of returns, but payments have dropped off again and wholesalers will be compelled to sell conservatively in some quarters. The apple supply is abundant. The Ontario yield has been large and the general quality is excellent. They are being distributed by the car load to all points of the west.

FOREIGN AND DRIED FRUITS—Mediterranean fruits have arrived several days late. Currants are a good quality but unusually small. The rains in Spain damaged much of the crop in that country. Figs arrived yesterday and the quality is excellent. The prices are remarkably low and an advance might well be expected. We quote advances on California raisins and muscatels. The crop was shorter than expected, and the demand is heavy. Wholesalers are awaiting the arrival of new dates. The old stuff is going at 7 cents.

EGGS—The fine weather has revived the local supply and the delivery is remarkably large. Wholesalers are jobbing at 30 cents to-day and the commodity is so popular that prices may advance still further.

BUTTER—No. 1 dairy is 25 cents to-day and No. 2 is firm at 22 cents. Creamery is moving well at 28 cents just now. These prices are firmer and they will undoubtedly go up.

Pork Packers Beginning to Stock Up Supplies

Hog Prices Higher Than for Many Years—Demand has Eased up—Exportation of Canadian Cream to the U. S. Regarded as Purely Local—Australia and New Zealand Increasing Make of Butter—Cheese is Easier.

The hog situation has a better outlook. Hogs are coming in more freely, and are in better shape. Prices paid at points in the country are $7.40 to $7.50, and the demand for cured meats keeps up well. Lumber camps are all supplied, and with a better run of hogs, packers will be able to get some stocks in hand. While one is apt to forget what has happened before, and to complain about the unusually high prices of the present time, it may be interesting to look at the following figures supplied by the "Chicago Drovers Journal:" "The average price of hogs for the month of October, this year, was $7.75; last year during the same month it was $6.05. In 1882 the average for October was $8.05, and in September of the same year it reached $8.80, which was the highest since war time. In 1878 the average in October dropped to $2.75, the lowest figure on record." Some of the butter dealers will remember that same year when lots of butter was sold as low as 6c a lb.

A good deal is said about the butter which is going to the States in the shape of cream. While this may affect the local values of butter temporarily in the vicinity where it is exported, it is, however, not likely to affect the price to any appreciable extent in general. With the quantity of butter, which is held in cold storage, the unexpected outlet of some of our butter in the shape of cream should be regarded as a fortunate circumstance. We are constantly looking all over the world for markets for our products, and when a profitable market for our butter opens up so near at home, why should we not take advantage of it, and be satisfied?

The increase in the production of butter, both in Australia and New Zealand, is expected to be 50 per cent. more than last year. This is pouring into England, and the market there for our butter is becoming more uncertain. Whether it was done intentionally or otherwise the shipping of cream to the States under the present circumstances is altogether in our favor.

Cheese in the principal markets of England is easier and may be quoted about 1 shilling lower.

BUTTER.—The butter market this week is beginning to show the effects of the cream shortage, accounts of which have recently appeared in The Grocer. This rise was predicted by us some time ago, and the present quotations, 1c. higher, are expected to be only the starting of a much more decided advance.

Well informed dealers have already anticipated this condition of affairs by buying as much and selling as little as possible.

Receipts for the week are 6,538 packages as against 6,666 packages same week last year.

For the season they are 346,306 packages as against 377,429 last year. The decrease is due to the shutting down of factories which are shipping their cream across the line to the United States.

CHEESE.—Conditions show a decided betterment over last week. Opinions were expressed that the improvement would not come until after the close of navigation; but the trade have evidently come to the conclusion that cheese, at present quotations, is cheap, and have been buying heavily during the past ten days, paying for the later-made goods higher prices than were paid for much finer September stock.

Export demand is unexpectedly good. It was thought, owing to the large New Zealand make, our trade would show a falling off. The entry of New Zealand in the British market has caused a change in the whole cheese situation. Heretofore Canada practically controlled the English market. This change has been shown very clearly during the past year. Cheese is 1c. cheaper now than at the same time last year, and has averaged that much less during the entire year This makes a loss to Canadian producers of over a million and a half dollars for the twelve months.

Receipts for the week are 54,448 boxes against 49,678 boxes last year. For the season they are 1,850,728 boxes as against 1,814,413 boxes in 1908.

EGGS.—New eggs are very scarce, and storage stock is being used to a large extent. Prices remain firm, with a slightly higher inclination. Receipts for the week were small, only 1,548 cases as against 4,998 cases same week last year. For the season they were 182,137 cases as against 184,636 cases during 1908. It would not be surprising in view of this shortage of new supplies if prices advanced, though at present storage stocks are large.

POULTRY.—Christmas trade is now beginning to quicken, and supplies of chickens and ducks are coming in fast. In order to assist grocers in disposing of their supplies of poultry, we quote prices which are at present being paid by Montreal dealers for lots.

Higher prices are being paid this year by the dealer than the same goods retailed for last year at this time.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—Trade is steady, but not large in volume. Dressed hogs are down 50 cents, while live ones are somewhat stronger. A general strengthening is looked for in the near future, owing to a tendency among the farmers to hold back their live stock for higher prices, which is developing at present.

TORONTO.

PROVISIONS.—A noticeable feature in the provision market is rather a better supply of hogs, and at the same time a falling off in the demand for cured meats. This will give the packers an opportunity to replenish their stocks which had been cleared out. Prices, however, both for hogs and the manufactured goods are in every respect the same as last week.

BUTTER.—The demand for fresh made butter is good, and all that comes in finds ready sale at full quotation prices, and for choice stuff an advance is frequently asked. Beyond the local demand there is very little doing. The frozen grass and an occasional feast of turnip begin to tell on the quality of butter.

CHEESE.—While there has been a little flutter in the cheese market, it is, however, difficult to say whether it is higher or lower. In some places a firmer feeling is reported, and in others this is not maintained. Sales at factories this week were made at from 11¼ to 11 5-16 cents. This is about 1 cent lower than last year at the same time. Local market prices still remain unchanged.

EGGS.—Strictly new laid eggs are practically out of the market, but the demand is well supplied with cold storage eggs, which are used for all purposes with fair satisfaction. Since the advent of the perfect system of refrigeration, strictly new laid eggs are not bossing the situation as they used to do, and good eggs are eaten on the table all the year round. Prices are firm, but the supply is sufficient.

POULTRY.—The poultry trade is in full swing, and every dealer is busy. Further Developments in Cream Exportation

Ninety-Two Quebec Factories Shipping to the United States—Greater Part Going into Direct Consumption — Butter Prices May be High This Year.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—In last week's Grocer a full account to date of the cream exportation, now so prevalent on the Canadian border, was published. Since that article was written, further information, of a still more startling nature, has been unearthed.

Where, last week, it was stated, that from twelve to fifteen Quebec factories were devoting themselves entirely to exportation, we now have figures showing that no less than 92 Quebec factories are putting forth all their energies in this direction.

A new feature has also developed as regards what is being done with the cream. At first it was thought most of it was going into butter, as, in fact, some of it is. Latest statistics show that the greater part is going into direct consumption, thus having only a negligible effect on the butter quotations. It would take our whole Canadian cream output to make any appreciable difference in United States butter prices, so it can readily be seen that the proportion now being turned into butter will not, in any way, be the self-cure for the present situation, by reducing United States prices to a point where it would pay Canadian producers to keep their cream here.

Less Than Last Year.

Some interesting data regarding the amount of stored buter in Montreal have come to light. It was first thought that much more must be in storage than at this time last year. A further investigation showed the following:

Receipts for 1908, less shipments to date, 54,000 packages.

Receipts for 1909, less shipments to date, 49,000 packages.

From this it will be seen that, with the same consumption as last year, there is still a loss of 5,000 packages. Most of the best-posted men in Montreal butter circles are agreed that consumption has largely increased during the present year. These statistics have added importance, from the fact that Montreal is, to a large extent, representative of the whole country in the provision market.

Not Much Export Trade.

The scarcity of butter is being felt to such an extent already, that there has been little export trade, while at this time last year there had been considerable. When the winter slackening of milk receipts comes on, there will be, according to careful estimates, only half the production of last year in this country.

The course taken by Montreal dealers is represented as a clear indication of what is expected this winter. They are quietly buying all the butter they can and selling only what is absolutely necessary, storing the rest for the winter trade. Large orders are being given even with the price open.

The expectation is that prices this winter will reach a point where we may be forced to import New Zealand butter, after which no further advance may be looked for. This will put prices higher than they have ever been before, owing to present general advanced figures asked in New Zealand for butter made there.

Butter is, at present, a good "buy" to hold for the winter months.

E. F. Whittemore, New Ontario salesman for "Salada" tea, returned last Saturday after a two weeks' hunting trip in the James Bay country. There were nine in the party, but the only game bagged was three moose, the largest weighing 1,137 pounds.

PRESENTATION TO HAMILTON GROCER.

The regular monthly meeting of the Hamilton Retail Grocers' Association was held in the board of trade rooms on the evening of November 4. John O. Carpenter, chairman of the picnic committee, made a final report, which showed a small balance to the good, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather the day of the outing.

The subject of the withdrawal of cash discounts from a great many lines of staple goods, which had been under discussion, was the means of drawing a large attendance. The secretary read a number of communications from the manufacturers and other associations. There is no doubt this will be a live topic at future meetings. There is a movement on foot to establish a provincial association.

After the regular business a very pleasant event took place when President John Forth, after congratulating the committee and chairman of the annual picnic, presented to Mr. Carpenter a handsome library table. Mr. Carpenter, who was taken completely by surprise, thanked the members of the association for their handsome gift and also for their assistance in making the picnic the success it was.

CO-OPERATIVE STORE IN PRESTON.

The Preston Co-operative Asociation, capitalized at $20,000, has been granted a charter by the Ontario government to "manufacture, buy sell and deal in goods, wares and merchandise." The provisional directors of the association are: William Kennedy and Thomas Perker, moulders; James Garfield Williams and John Rentoul Bradish, machinists; Joseph Daniel, superintendent; Arthur Nuttall, carpenter; Robert Jacob Kaufman, patternmaker, and William Bechthold, engineer, all of Preston, Ont.

PACKING AND MARKING FOR EXPORT.

Ottawa, November 8, 1909

In the weekly report issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce, special attention is called to the subject of packing and marking exports, and the evils arising from non-attention to these matters speedily reflect not only upon the exporter but eventually upon the nation as a whole. As the aim is to secure repeat orders every care should be exercised in the preparation for shipment of the articles exported.

In the exporting of poultry, it is suggested that they be packed in dozen lots in each case and these dozens graded in size and weight. Cheese boxes come in for some criticism as not being sufficiently strong to stand usuage of transport, and again it is suggested that the particulars of manufacture be marked on the cheese itself as well as on the boxes.

If agents' instructions were implicitly followed there would be little opportunity for dissatisfaction.

A Grocer Converted to Handling Confectionery.

Pail of Candy Came by Mistake—But Was Sold at a Profit of $2.40—A Traveler's Suggestions on Handling and Displaying Confections—Showcases Should be Placed Near the Door.

"Too many grocers," remarked a confectionery traveler the other day, "give the matter of carrying confections but little attention and fail to see that they are cutting off a direct source of profit as well as missing many sales of groceries that might be made to the individual who had been induced to visit the store because of an attractive display of confections.

"I have in mind a grocer in a small town who ten years ago handled no candy at all and never intended to. He received by mistake one day a 30-pound pail of candy and rather than go to the trouble of returning it he put a price-card on it and set it on his counter. Before the time of closing on the following day the pail was empty and the grocer had made a profit of $2.40. This little incident made him decide to put in a line of confections, and he is now selling several tons of candy each year, and his net profit is increased by several hundred dollars. And so, I believe, it is altogether possible for the grocer or general merchant in a small town to do a profitable business in confections.

Counter Arrangement.

"I think it pays to give the candy counter one of the most prominent positions in the store. With a little care and attention a very attractive display can be made with a comparitively small stock.

"When a customer is attracted to enter your store by a tempting display of confections a favorable impression is at once created, and even though the party may buy no candy at that time, you have made it easier for him to come again, for the very presence of a neatly arranged candy department gives character to the whole store and may very easily influence some people to trade with you who might not otherwise.

"Of course a candy department will not run itself. If you are situated so that you can, or if your trade warrants it, it is best to have a saleslady at the department all the time. She can keep the show-cases clean, make the display as tempting as possible. Keep a close tab on what is required and give suggestions on how the department might be improved.

Occasionally I run across a grocer who will not listen to the suggestion that he establish a confectionery department; but I find on my subsequent rounds that he is more willing to hear what I have to say and usually I sell him confectionery. I point out the fact that he can make as much if not more profit out of good candy than he can from any other article he sells—that is, if he gives the department some care and attention.

"Nearly all grocers are now selling confectionery because they know it pays them well to do so. Some, of course, still declare they will not be bothered with it, but, as the above story indicates, they are finding out by actual experience the value of handling this class of goods.

Location of the Department

"If I were a grocer I would place my confectionery show-cases as near the front of the store as possible, providing they were attractive. Very often when they are placed in such a position they attract passers-by and sell much better and I would impress upon all merchants the advantages of displaying in prominent places all goods that present them good profits."

CANNED GOODS TO ADVANCE.

"According to my figuring, the prices of canned goods must advance," said Geo. E. Fisher, of the Burlington Canning Co., to The Grocer one day this week. "The demand, at the prevailing low prices will be larger than ever before. Combine this with the revival of good times, increased population and better distribution facilities, and we must admit that everything points to extraordinary consumption of canned goods, which means an advance in prices."

EXPORT NEWS.

Two cars containing 1,500 gross of "2 in 1" shoe polish passed through Toronto recently per C.P.R., leaving Montreal on the 2nd inst., for Australia by the steamer "Montezuma." This is the second large shipment of "2 in 1" that has been shipped to Australia this year. The goods were sent through the Imperial Export Co., Toronto.

Wheat and Flour on a See-Saw

Higher Prices one Day Tumble the Next—Demand Not so Keen—Heavy Wheat Movement From the West — Inferior Wheat Selling in England at Low Prices Holds up Delivery of Canadian Grains.

The wheat and flour situation is as much a puzzle as ever. Since last week almost daily changes have taken place, either up or down, and yet in the whole the prices are practically the same, although perhaps favoring an upward tendency. The demand for flour, however, is not as keen. This may be owing to the fact that the rush, which always takes place before navigation closes, is over, and this is usually followed by a certain degree of dullness. The general feeling is a firmer confidence in the market, and in the likelihood that present prices will be fully maintained.

The movements of wheat from the west are very heavy, but the export demand is less active. This appears to be owing to the inferior wheat in England, which is milled and rushed on the market at low prices.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Owing to the continued holding off of wheat by the farmers, winter wheat patents are very scarce, and prices are becoming firmer every day. It is hoped that this condition will not keep up much longer, as from present weather indications, fall ploughing will soon be over and farmers will then feel free to do more drawing of wheat. At present orders are more plentiful for high grade goods than are the goods themselves. There are no changes in quotations.

ROLLED OATS—Some heavy sales in the past week have resulted in a general livening up of the rolled oat market. It is not expected to continue long, as the cause assigned is simply a filling of some special temporary need. No changes in price are quoted.

FLOUR — There is nothing of any consequence to report this week. Wheat is fluctuating from day to day, but in the course of a week very often it has not moved a single point. Flour is more steady, especially the local market, which has not changed for several weeks.

CEREALS—Although both wheat and oats are firm and higher, the manufactured goods are still sold at the same price as last week. The demand has lost some of its keeness, and buyers are looking for lower prices, but as a manufacturer this week remarked with considerable confidence, "they will be fooled."

A Vancouver report states that Andrews & Nunn, grocers, of Mount Pleasant, have sold their business to the People's Grocery & Bakery Co., Ltd., who have now four stores running in the city. The purchase price was between $5,000 and $6,000.

THINKING VS. DREAMING.

Sometimes when you suddenly wake up and find yourself wasting a whole lot of time over an unimportant matter, experiencing difficulty in arriving at a conclusion, just open your eyes still wider, and ask yourself the question: Am I actually thinking about this subject, or am I simply dreaming about it?

Thinking involves concentration —the forcing of given facts into logical and sequential order, from which further facts are evolved, and ultimately the decision in the whole matter.

Dreaming involves an involuntary revolving in the mind of given facts until they finally lodge themselves in some position whereby a conclusion is reached—and it is very apt to be an unsafe conclusion.

If business men would do more real thinking and less dreaming, how much more work, and how much better work, they would be able to do.—Herman Price in Graphite.

When Brown Bought Out Smith

BROWN is young and aggressive.
He was also Toronto born.
He always had yearnings for a grocery business by his "lonesome."

From his tenderest years he haunted the corner grocery—because the biscuits were good and the boss was busy.

So, when Smith hung out the "For Sale" sign as a window display—Brown was one of the first to see the invitation.

The first to accept the challenge.

• • • •

Because Brown's pater had the cash, everything ran on wheels.

Behold Brown Jr. duly inducted "boss" in a shop of his very own. Smith he noticed had been selling half-a-dozen brands of flour.

In fact, a little of everything and little of anything.

But Brown wasn't born in Toronto for nothing.

Wise he was, and keen, and aggressive.

Both his eyes were good.

• • • •

Out of every ten women who called, the FIVE ROSES majority stood out like unto an exaggerated wart on an elongated nose.

Ay, Brother Grocer.

Every woman who called for FIVE ROSES flour—and got it—became at once infected with the "come again" microbe.

Smith hadn't noticed that—Brown did the second day of his election.

But Smith never noticed very much, anyway.

Maybe that's why he sold out, who knows.

Now Brown didn't want any "Transient Trade."

When he said "please step into my parlor," he meant each stepper-in to become a fixed asset upon whom he could bank.

So he handed over FIVE ROSES when she said "flour."

He knew the difference between the "come back" and the "come again."

• • • •

Brown doesn't sell any other flour. For reasons that stand out, Brother Grocer.

This is the true story of Brown, who bought out Smith less than a month ago in Toronto.

His sign reads—

"I don't stock FIVE ROSES—I sell it."

Another states—

"Everybody satisfied."

Including Brown, of course.

• • • •

Which, Brother Grocer, would YOU rather be:

Smith or Brown?

Plan of Western Merchant in Collecting Accounts

Debtor Should First Become Interested — Rules Ought to be Flexible to Meet Varying Circumstances—Nature of the Series of Letters Sent to a Slow Pay.

Calgary, Alberta, Nov. 9.—The first thing necessary in collecting accounts, said a local merchant the other day, is to get a debtor interested in a debt. In order to do so a letter, short and to the point, can be written, laying before him the nature of the indebtedness, in order to get him interested. Once his interest is aroused other letters can be sent, it being necessary, of course, to form an idea of the nature and personality of the debtor in question.

As a matter of fact, correspondence through the mail is merely a matter of sizing up human nature. The employe to whom is assigned the duty of collecting accounts has a highly important work, for there is a time to be severe, and a time not to be severe. The collecting work should be under the management of one who while using tact and retaining the good will of the customers can keep up the collections.

The collector should explain to each debtor that it is necessary to collect money promptly in order to conduct a business properly, but few firms can force all customers to live up to an iron-clad rule regarding the time of payment and retain their trade. In some places tradesmen in excellent standing are accustomed to pay bills only at the end of thirty or sixty days. Therefore, a firm desiring to have all bills paid in thirty days, must if doing business all over the country be tactful and allow its rules to be sufficiently flexible to meet varying circumstances. Many firms hold to the policy of writing letters the day after accounts are due, and making formal requests for payment.

Be Careful in Dunning.

In most lines of business it is advisable to introduce some manifestation of personal interest that will take away from the dunning letters all the disagreeable effects, yet retain the usefulness of the work. In the case of a hard debt, a letter might be written enclosing a statement, and stating that it was necessary to have a payment as early as possible as you have bills of your own to meet. Then follow this up by showing that you still desire patronage by speaking of a new line of goods you have just received.

If a letter of this kind brings no response, it would be well, after giving a reasonable length of time for attention, to send a second letter firmly emphasing the fact that the account has run for some time over the usual limit, and as you must have money to run your business the account should be given attention without any further delay.

Then if debtors pay no heed to such letters, a firm is certainly justified in drawing on a customer. If the customer refuses to pay, or there seems danger of losing the account by failure it is then time to act quickly and send a personal representative. As many men object seriously to drafts, this method of collecting must be used with caution. It is really difficult to lay down rules, because what holds good for one business and one class of debtors would not hold good for another, because proper action must be considered largely by the circumstances of each case.

The Last Resort.

If letters and drafts have no effect the case should be placed in the hands of an attorney who is in the employ of the firm, as experience proves that a letter over the signature of an attorney is often all that is necessary with obstinate and indifferent debtors. In all cases the correspondence and conversation should be courteous, as very often customers become offended at a harsh or hasty demand for money and turn their patronage elsewhere.

TRADE NOTES.

T. D. MacIntyre, Dundalk, Ont., has moved into a new store fitted in up-to-date fashion. He intends to keep only quality goods.

J. C. Mullin, Church and Wellington Streets, Alliston, two weeks ago opened a store with a stock of about $800 in groceries, and already reports business good.

The grocery business formerly conducted by E. J. Reid, of Everett, Ont., recently came into the possession of B. Fairs. Mr. Fairs reports business in a healthy condition.

A despatch from Turks Island, Bahamas, states that a recent rainfall of over 10 inches overflowed the salt ponds and caused an immense loss of salt, the raking of which is the most important industry in the Turks and Caicos Islands. About 1,800,000 bushels are raked and exported annually.

Blenheim, Ont., merchants have made a slight change in the hours of closing. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays they will close at 6 and other nights at 8. This agreement holds good during the winter.

GREEN FRUITS—Pears have practically disappeared from the market. Those which still remain are of very indifferent quality, and are not of sufficient importance to quote. Canadian plums are also off the market.

Among the new goods now being quoted are Baldwins, Spies, Famieux and Greenings of the apple family. The quality of such of these apples as have found their way to the local market is very good, though some complaints have been made as to their being small for firsts.

Apple shipments for the week ending Nov. 6, were 56,578 bbls., as against 37,731 bbls. same week last year. To date for the season they are 402,993 bbls., as against 256,131 bbls. 1908. These figures show that this year is proving much better for apples than last year.

FISH—The close season for lake trout and whitefish is on, and only a few fresh in these lines are obtainable.

The market is active, particularly in the pickled and salt fish, as country merchants are ordering their supplies before the close of navigation. Some frozen fish from the Pacific coast and Manitoban lakes are now in transit, and will be ready for Advent trade. Also frozen herring and mackerel from the east. Prices for these goods will rule about the same as last season.

Shell oyster trade is showing improvement, and the best grades are selling high.

A Vancouver concern has just completed arrangements to ship fresh salmon direct to London, Eng. It is claimed that this can be done successfully by proper chilling of the fish, and expects to start the first shipment of fifty tons in the near future.

Heretofore all shipments have been frozen fish only, but in case the initial shipment arrives in first class condition, it is thought most future lots will be sent fresh. The price in London will be about five pence per pound.

GREEN FRUITS — Apples are now almost the only domestic fruit in the market. A few late peaches of poor quality are still awaiting buyers. Grapes are yet here, but they are getting stale and hard to sell. Apples are now taking up the principal time of the dealers. While the market is pretty well stocked, they are nearly all fall apples and a good many culls at that. They are selling from $1.50 to $2.50 a barrel, according to quality. Snow apples go as high as $4. Very few good winter apples are offered.

The California late Valencia oranges are about over, but are promptly followed by the Florida, the first car of which has arrived. New Palermo lemons are also on hand, as well as grape fruit.

VEGETABLES—Potatoes are handled in large quantities. Retail merchants are buying freely and large quantities are being stored for winter. THE ITALIAN LANGUAGE would be nice to understand when we hear a conversation in Italian and want to know what they are talking about. Space does not permit me to explain much. I will tell you about FRATELLI---this word means Brothers and from the same root we have Fraternity. So when you hear or read Fratelli Follina it translates Follina Brothers---Packers of finest Sicily Lemons. Look for this name on every box of lemons you buy. Quality and packing unexcelled.

FISH—The month of November is the closed season for trout and whitefish and therefore these lines can only be bought from frozen stock. In speaking with one of the dealers, he declared that the closed season is not nearly long enough to give the fish a chanve to spawn. Herrings are the principal fresh fish used just now. Finnan haddie are in good demand. Business on the whole is very satisfactory.

TRADE NOTES.

H. Precious, Guelph, Ont., has sold his grocery business to Robinson Bros.

P, E. Lessard, of Edmonton, Alta., is opening a general store in Vegreville, Alta.

L. Randall & Sons, Moncton, N.B., have opened their new store at 322 St. George Street.

The owners of a St. Abbs fishing boat have made the important discovery that a net dyed as nearly as possible the hue of the sea, instead of the traditional brown, yields much larger results in the matter of fish caught. The discovery was, says the Western Morning News, put to the test a short time ago, when, out of a fleet of sixty-five boats, the boat with its nets dyed blue made far and away the largest catch. The dye used is bluestone. The discovery has aroused much interest among the fishermen.

KILGOUR BROS.

"We will never be buried with the unknown dead—we advertise. There's the whole thing in a nutshell—we advertise and, therefore, we cannot be unknown—See?"

The above is an extract from an advertisement that appeared several years ago over the name of a firm that has since made remarkable progress in its line. This particular ad. outlined the general policy of the house. Another paragraph that contains splendid food for thought is the following:

"The forget-me-nots of to-day are frequently the has-beens of to-morrow."

Just turn this over in your mind—The firm that advertises cannot be unknown or forgotten.

Being in the background of a merchant's mind, at a moment which decides the direction business shall take, may mean serious losses. When you advertise you cannot be overlooked—you always receive consideration—a consideration above that accorded the house that does not see the benefit of talking to the merchant when he has time to listen – when he sits down to read THE CANADIAN GROCER.

Next week's issue – A concrete example of one way in which THE CANADIAN GROCER brings buyer and seller together.

Talking to the Point

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS get right down to the point at issue. If you want something, say so in a few well-chosen words. Readers like that sort of straight-from-the-shoulder-talk, and that is the reason why condensed ads are so productive of the best kind of results.

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS are always noticed. They are read by wide-awake, intelligent grocers, who are on the look-out for favorable opportunities to fill their requirements.

Currants
Of High Repute

Aside from their high quality, the evenness of the packing is a feature that will appeal instantly in currants shipped by

THE GREEK CURRANT COMPANY

Fine, selected, high grade in every respect and well deserving of the place they occupy in the front rank of popular estimation. The Greek Currant Co. has a reputation to conserve and that's why their product never varies.

Fruits
Dried or Canned

The "Griffin" Brand of dried and other fruits established the standard of quality from which all other brands are judged, years and years ago. Comparisons are made from the "Griffin" Brand.

GRIFFIN & SKELLEY

Their seeded and seedless Raisins, Canned Fruits, white and green Asparagus, Sterilized Prunes, Cured Fruits, are steady sellers to the most particular people – people who make a hobby out of "Quality." Best because no others are quite so good.

Gelatine
The Best There Is

Cox's Gelatine (in powdered form) is as staple as sugar, tea or salt. It is as safe to stock up with as sugar, tea or salt. No other gelatine claims superiority, because it involves wasted effort so to do.

COX'S

It is the absolutely pure gelatine. It never disappoints the cook. It never fails to accomplish the desired and expected result. And it maintains its unsullied reputation for quality steadily year in and year out.

PURITY FLOUR

Tell the Home-Baker About It

The woman who bakes her own bread will be willing to try PURITY FLOUR if you will tell her these facts—and it will pay you to do so.

Tell her that PURITY FLOUR is made of the high-grade constituents of the hard wheat berry—no low-grade constituents in it.

Tell her that by using PURITY FLOUR she can improve the flavor of her bread. Make it even more delicious than it is now.

Tell her that the bread will be more nutritious, as PURITY FLOUR is richer in gluten—the most nourishing element of the wheat berry.

Tell her that PURITY FLOUR goes farther—produces more loaves to the barrel.

Tell her that the little higher price of PURITY FLOUR is greatly overbalanced by its extra quality—that PURITY is actually unbeatable value at the price for which it is sold.

A little talk along the above lines will encourage a lot of housewives to try PURITY FLOUR. And it will do all you say it will.

Those who buy it on your recommendation will have a good opinion of your judgment. They will consider you a good judge of quality. They will be willing to buy other lines of goods when you recommend their quality.

Talk quality. It pays. And talk PURITY FLOUR. It is on the top-most rung of the Quality Ladder.
